The Plot: This story is concerned with the differing methods of Wade Terhune, scientific detective, and McCarty, ex-roundsman, and contrary to the general rule in novels, the scientific detective gets the worst of the contest. The story opens with the visit of the detectives to Calvin Norwood, who shows them the museum in which he has collected many relics of crime. The body of Evelyn Jarvis is discovered on a table in this museum, evidently choked to death only a few hours before. The problem arises as to how the body came to be in Norwood's museum instead of her own house next door. Terhune starts out to fasten the crime on the blind secretary, Victor Marshall, who commits suicide. McCarty, however, by a long series of straightforward investigations learns that the murder was committed by Eric Vivaseur, who under another name had married Evelyn Jarvis many years before and who was supposed to be dead. The girl, deserted in the South, had followed him to his yacht in northern waters and shot him. He had fallen from the yacht but, being only slightly wounded, swam ashore. Happening upon a drowned man, he transferred to the body of the unidentified man, his own papers and rings and was thus reported murdered. Evelyn made her escape and years later married Jarvis. Some months previous to the murder with which the story begins she had received a Christmas cake with the word "Noel" upon it—this being a hint of what was to follow, her husband's name having been "Leon." Other threats followed pasted on paper in macaroni paste—letters such as are used in soups, and from this the story takes its title of "Twenty-Six Clues"—these clues being the twenty-six letters of the alphabet.

Locale: New York and on board yacht in river.

Picture High Lights: Dramatic scene at the discovery of the murder; good opportunity for emotional work in earlier part of story.

"The Groper"
By Henry G. Aikman

Character of Story: A man's struggle for success.

Theme: Ideals.

Characters: Lee Hillquit, in search of his fortune; Vera Wakefield, his fiancee; Milo Higginson, his rival; Mrs. Tom Curran, rich, impressionable, a widow; Howard Doman, Advertising Manager of Curran's store; Dr. Ellwood James, a gay dog; Dolores McGovern, a shop girl; Fred Badger, a little brother to the rich; Eleanor Badger, a little sister to the rich; Will Eaton, a genius from Boston.

The Plot: Lee Hillquit, "the groper," goes to Detroit from a country town to make his fortune; after some months of fruitless effort to sell real estate he makes the acquaintance, at church, of Mrs. Tom Curran, a widow, heavily interested in Curran's big department store and deeply interested in young men. She secures Lee a position as window dresser in the store. Vera Wakefield, the girl he left behind him grows tired of waiting for Lee to make his fortune and marries Milo

Higginson, son of the local banker and a drunkard. Lee, who began his friendship with Mrs. Curran in the highest conception of platonic friendship finds that she has a stronger interest in him. As she is older than he, he does not care for this but realizes that his success depends on her favor. She advances him rapidly until Fred Badger, who cut him when he first met him in Detroit, takes him up and into society. Dr. Ellwood James, another college mate, shows Lee the night side of life and Lee, to forget the real reason of his success, plunges into dissipation. A mild flirtation with a shop girl, Dolores McGovern, is followed by a general pursuit of ephemeral friendships among women of James' acquaintance. Lee inherits some money on the death of his mother and invests it on the advice of Mrs. Curran, realizing enormously on his investments and becoming a millionaire almost over night. By this time he has advanced to the head of the advertising department through the influence of Mrs. Curran and friendship of Howard Doman. Lee resigns his position and becomes a capitalist. Vera appears in Detroit having left her husband because of brutality. She has a small job in a theatre. Lee makes up his mind to break with the widow and does so. Fred Badger induces him to invest in a motor car business with Eaton of Boston, who has designed a new car. The business becomes heavily involved and Eleanor Badger, in whom Lee has become interested, drops him. Lee loses his money but is offered a good position by Doman, now general manager of the Curran store. He finds Vera with a baby and helps her to get a divorce from Milo. Lee and Vera determine to pick up the threads of their lives and work out their destinies together.

Locale: Detroit.

Picture High Lights: Scene in which Fred becomes aware of widow's interest; meeting of Lee and Vera; night scenes in cafes; Lee's discovery that he is rich; Milo Higginson's attack on his wife; Lee's return to Vera.

"Jenny Be Good"

By Wilbur Finley Fauley

Character of Story: Society story.

Theme: High and low life.

Characters: Jenny Riano (Mary Pickford type) lead; Nancy Beadle, her grandmother; Royal Renshaw (male lead) handsome youth; Aaron Shuttles, traction magnate, his step-father; Sophia Shuttles, Royal's mother; Carrie Cruikshank, Sophia's sister; Jolanda Van Mater, society girl; Mrs. Van Mater, her mother, old family; Anne Silverman, strike leader; Gene Jiggs, musician; Clementina, his wife; Polly Primrose, social pirate; Mrs. Rossiter Jones, the real thing in society.

The Plot: Jenny is an orphan living with her aged grandmother in the little village of Tranquility in New England. Upon her mother's side of the family she is descended from Puritan stock, upon her father's from the Portugese fisher folk. The paternal strain has endowed her with a love for music and natural genius for the violin. Aaron Shuttles establishes a summer resort at Tranquility. Jenny meets and loves Royal Renshaw, Shuttle's step-son, and they are secretly married. Mrs. Shuttles, social climber, has planned to marry her son to Jolanda van Mater and has purchased Mrs. van Mater's consent with a heavy loan of money. Discovering the marriage of Jenny and Royal, she ships her son to Europe and has the marriage annuled on the ground that the two are under age. Jenny's grandmother dies and Jenny goes to the city where she falls in with Anne Silverman, a leader of striking garment workers. For a time she works as a strike leader but decides that if she is to succeed she must lift herself above the struggling mass. She goes to live with Gene Jiggs and his wife, formerly a musician but now crippled with rheumatism and keeping a doll's hospital. She plays evenings at small theatres and gains a reputation as a violinist. Jolanda van Mater has meanwhile become a drug fiend through the influence of Polly Primrose, social pirate, who keeps a tea shop that is really a gambling den. Jolanda's reputation suffers. Royal, who has returned from Europe and accepted his step-father's offer of the assistant managership of the traction lines, marries Jolanda to protect her from gossip after having been told by Jenny that she does not wish to harm his career. Jenny continues to succeed, aided by Mrs. Rossiter Jones who makes her a protege. Royal and Jolanda lead a cat and dog life. Royal unearths irregularities in his step-father's conduct of the traction lines and to revenge himself for the high-handed way he has been treated, exposes his step-father and Aaron Shuttles is ruined and goes to prison. In the smash Royal loses his own money. Jolanda is arrested in a raid on Polly's tea room. Royal starts with her for a sanitarium. She struggles to jump from the car and the car is wrecked. Jolanda is killed and Royal injured. Jenny nurses him and loses her hold on the public by canceling engagements. Royal recuperating, Jenny runs away to the old village. Royal follows and they face the new life together.

Locale: New England village and New York exteriors and interiors.

Picture High Lights: Too numerous to detail.

"The Other Side of the Wall"

By Henry Justin Smith

Character of Story: The war at home.

Theme: Regeneration of a slacker.

Characters: Lance Happerth, a hot house product; Pauline, his wife; Barton Fanning, banker, her father; Tom Fanning, her brother; Mrs. Fanning, her mother; Aunt Pringle, Pauline's aunt; Alfred Harrold, an imaginary rival.

The Plot: Lance Happerth, a rather effeminate young man with a clever pen is a special writer for a newspaper and lives with his wife, the daughter of a suburban banker, in a fashionable suburb of a middle Western metropolis, evidently Chicago. Lance, like most of the other young men of his acquaintance, spends more than he makes, takes life lightly and sneers at the idea that the United States could be drawn into the war. He openly asserts that wars are made by capitalists and that only fools can be duped by the bait of patriotism. Barton Fanning, threatened with ruin, attempts to save some of his fortune for himself by presenting his daughter with $40,000, which he expects to be able to get back from her at any time. This moves the draft board to call on Lance who had claimed exemption because of a dependent wife. Lance, perforce, goes into the army, hating the army and all that it represents. He is particularly aggrieved at having to salute Tom Fanning, his brother-in-law, who has, for years, been the black sheep of the family, but who is now a lieutenant. Barton Fanning comes to grief and failure suddenly and finds that Pauline has been spending the money he gave her. Aunt Pringle, with the aid of a clever lawyer, hangs onto a small fortune she had borrowed from the bank and gives shelter to the broken Fanning family. Lance and Pauline are estranged, first because he blames her for his being drafted, and second because an anonymous letter states that she is in love with Harrold. Fanning is indicted. Meanwhile Lance has been molded into a soldier and one by one has dropped his prejudices, coming to regard the war as do his comrades and developing a decision and manliness not known to him before. He returns home on furlough and at the risk of his own life saves Barton Fanning who attempts suicide by jumping in the river. Upon his recovery he is eager to get to the front but the doctors reject him and he is consoled by his reconciliation with Pauline, whom he finds to have been innocent, and the offer of his old job on the newspaper.

Locale: Chicago. Military camp.

Picture High Lights: Lance's departure for war; his unexpected return; the run on the bank; the rescue.

Actual "shooting" of the initial scenes for May Allison's next starring vehicle, "The Walk Offs," to follow her Ccreen Classics, Inc., special "Fair and Warmer," will begin within ten days.

Myron Selznick announces that he has purchased the motion picture rights to the well known novel, "His Wife's Money," by May Tully.

"Lost Battalion" Is Selling Fast

"THE Lost Battalion" which just completed a successful two weeks' run at the Geo. M. Cohan theatre on Broadway, is rapidly being sold on the State Rights market by W. H. Productions Co. This history-making production which crowded the theatre at every performance has stood the test of the public approval and has been proclaimed a success by its popular applause.

"The Lost Battalion" re-creates for posterity the magnificent defense of the heart of the Argonne with its weary and heartsick days and nights of thirst and starvation. It is a production that will live forever in memory.

There are some wonderfully appealing characters in "The Lost Battalion," men who were never behind the footlights of a modern stage, but who looked at death smilingly as they crawled through the mazes of the most impenetrable jungle in France, with bullets nipping the grass all around them. Each man is a chapter in himself, each has his own particular romance, and the romance follows him and lives with him in the darkest recesses of the Argonne.

There have been many re-creations of historic events, episodes of our national life enacted by thespians, but here is a drama in which every bit is played by the brothers, sweethearts, husbands and buddies of every American audience—the men who were called upon to play the original roles in the defense of their own lives.

The military phases of the production were supervised by Captain W. J. Cullen who commanded a company in the Argonne forest and under whose direction the same company, or those who have returned from the Argonne Water Hole, have again played for posterity the parts they had to play under the grilling fire of the Germans.

One thrilling incident that has been emphasized in "The Lost Battalion" by Captain Cullen, is the bombardment of the Water Hole by the Germans who in an attempt to drive the Americans to surrender through thrist, kept up a continuous bombardment of machine gun fire on the water hole at night. In spite of their efforts and Hunnish deviltry, many of the boys of the Lost Battalion bellied through the underbrush to the water edge and there filled their water bottles, returning to their line of defense, if not shot, as so many others who made the attempt to relieve the sufferings of their comrades. The picture fairly thrills with similar incidents.

Lieutenant Augustus Kaiser, a graduate of Heidelberg and a naturalized American before the war, served in the Argonne with the Lost Battalion, and when not actually directing his men, spent the tedious hours drawing pictures of the men under fire. Many of the ideas that he penciled in the Argonne have been used by him in drawing title decorations, an added and artistic feature of this production.

Conspicuously well directed and originally cast, "The Lost Battalion" does not imprint the disagreeable aspects of the late world conflict and its effects upon the consciousness of its audiences. It is rather the romance which is drawn out than the tragic hours spent in the bullet plowed recesses of the Argonne forest.

W. H. Reports a Heavy Demand for Big Production

Joins Norma Talmadge Company's Staff

Grant Carpenter has been engaged by Jos. M. Schenck, to join the staff of the Norma Talmadge Film Co., as scenario reader and organizer of the scenario department, for Mr. Schenck's film activities. Mr. Carpenter moves into his new offices at 140 West 42d St., this week. In addition to reading and selecting stories, he will have a share in adaptations, titles, etc.

Appointed to Manage Realart Branch

Melville E. Maxwell, long associated with the selling of photoplays through his connection with the sales organizations of several of the larger distributing companies, has been appointed manager of the Omaha branch of Realart Pictures Corporation by Arthur S. Kane, president of the company.

Closing Stunts in "The Fatal Fortune"

During the past week there has been much activity around the S. L. K. studio at Grantwood, New Jersey, where the new Helen Holmes Serial "The Fatal Fortune" is being made.

As the serial nears completion the electrifying climaxes become more numerous, and some really sensational stunts have been promised for the grand finale.

The later episodes of the serial which is under the master direction of Donald Mackenzie, calls for many aeroplane stunts and the local papers have published stories that Helen Holmes will attempt to leap from one aeroplane to another in midair while both planes are traveling at a terrific speed.

Record for "Upstairs"

To Goldwyn goes the honor of being the first producing and distributing company to introduce a two weeks' run at a picture theatre in New Orleans. Never in the history of the Louisiana city had a photoplay been shown for more than a one week's engagement until Mabel Normand, in "Upstairs," established a new record by remaining at the Trianon theatre, one of the finest houses in New Orleans, for a second week.

IT isn't every father who has the opportunity of having charge of the film destinies of a son of the early age of four and one-half years, but this is what Reeves Eason is doing at Universal City in his direction of "The Cowboy and the Kid." Director Eason is using his boy, Breezy Reeves, in the picture. The youngster was featured in "Nine-tenths of the Law." Eason's next picture, "The Man-Hunter" will feature Arthur Accord and Mildred Moore.

Jacard finally has decided upon a title for the special aviation feature he recently completed at Universal City, in which Lieut. Locklear performed many thrilling stunts in mid-air. The photoplay which in addition to Lieut. Locklear, has Alan Forrest and Francillia Billington in the leading roles, is to be called, "Cassidy of the Airlanes."

Alfred E. Green, who recently concluded an engagement with the Fox Company to direct Monte M. Katterjohn pictures, has just completed his production of "Love, Honor and Obey" from a story by Mr. Katterjohn. The picture features House Peters and other members of the cast are Vincent Serano, Edward M. Kimball, Mary Alden, Ruth St. Clair, Sam Sothern and Mildred Reardon.

Conspicuous in the Los Angeles premier of "The Eyes of Youth," the Clara Kimball Young picture, which is to be released early in October, will be a new song specially composed by Irvin Berlin, the famous music writer, for that production. The composer's offering which is said to be a sure hit, takes its name from the title of Miss Young's production.

Bessie Barriscale, who upon completion of her present contract for a series of productions, is preparing for a trip abroad, is receiving lessons in Italian from Eugeen Gaudio, her chief cameraman. Miss Barriscale says that she intends to spend a season in Italy and wishes to be able to ask for her spaghetti and raviolis without the aid of an interpreter. Miss Barriscale's next production will be "Beckoning Roads," the story by Jean Judson which has been purchased specially for her. She is completing her work on "Kittie Kelley, M. D."

As the result of his success of the last eight months in the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in Capital Comedies, William Seiter has been selected to direct Billie Rhodes in her current vehicle, "Hearts and Masks" from the novel of that name by Harold MacGrath. Mr. Seiter made a record for himself with the De Haven comedies, among them being "After the Ball," "Close to Nature," "Their Day of Rest" and "Boys Will Be Boys."

Bringing with him a wealth of experience as a fiction, vaudeville and scenario writer, Everett C. Maxwell has been engaged on contract to do a series of comedies for "Smiling" Billy Parsons with the National Film Corporation.

Having been selected specially for the part because of his unique ability for roles of its character and because of his specially fine physique, Thomas Santschi has the leading role opposite Cathrine Curtis in that new star's initial production, and has accompanied the company on its trip to Spokane, Washington, where they will be engaged for about two months filming exterior scenes. Santschi has a role, it is said, not unlike the one in which he became famous in "The Spoilers."

Director Frank Lloyd has returned from Puget Sound, Washington, where he made many picturesque scenes for his forth-coming production of the Rex Beach story, "The Silver Horde," which will be one of Goldwyn's Eminent Authors' films. Director Lloyd stated that work in many of his scenes was impeded by large forest fires in that vicinity, but that on the other hand he obtained many unusual "shots" of these for use in some future picture.

Lois Wilson, Bryant Washburn's leading woman, is recovering from an operation for appendicitis, at the Good Samaritan hospital in Los Angeles. She had only began work in Washburn's forth-coming Paramount picture, "It Pays to Advertise," when she became ill and an immediate operation was necessary.

Ida May Parks is rapidly assuming a prominent place in the ranks of the few woman directors of which Lois Weber is a striking example. Miss Parks has been engaged to direct Lew Cody's third feature which has Jack Moker as leading male support. She was responsible for several Universal's most notable films.

For her forth-coming production of "Pollyanna," Mary Pickford has engaged Louise Du Pre, the ingenue whose screen work has earned for her the name of "the cinema cameo."

Jean Acker has been loaned specially by the Metro studios for work at William Desmond's principal support in that star's production of "The Blue Bandanna," at the Jesse D. Hampton studio. Miss Acker was said to be specially fitted for the part and appears with such widely known character actors, as Russell Simpson and Frank Lanning in the supporting cast.

Alice Joyce in "The Winchester Woman," a Vitagraph offering

Marion Davies has come into another delectable possession—a $19,500 fur cape, which her screen fans will see for the first time in her next feature, on which she will soon commence work at the Biograph studio.

Norma Talmadge's marmoset "Jocko," who was purchased for a scene in "The Call of Nature," and subsequently endeared himself to everyone at the Talmadge studio, who survived a rough sea voyage, a bloody encounter with Dinky Talmadge, Norma's Pekinese, two interview's with Klieg lights, and enough peanuts and cherries to feed a whole menagerie of marmosets, has succumbed to an unromantic cough. An atmosphere of gloom and sadness pervades the whole studio while stars and property boys lament their little mascot.

Percy Marmont, leading man for Alice Joyce in "The Winchester Woman" and "Pride," is also playing lead for Corinne Griffith in "The Climbers," directed by Tom Terriss. Several scenes for this picture were laid on the water and were taken near Bayshore, L. I., from a raft about half a mile from shore. Director and players went out to the raft in a small gasoline launch, and one afternoon Director Terriss drowsed off during the trip and permitted a lighted cigarette to fall on his coat, which started to smoulder. Since Mr. Terriss was sitting on the gasoline tank, Mr. Marmont thought it best to run no chances, lifted his director and eased him over the side of the boat, thus extinguishing the fire. Mr. Terriss isn't going to eat any more big shore dinners in the middle of the day—at least, not when Percy is in his cast.

Rubye DeRemer, who will be featured as leading woman in the American Cinema production starring E. K. Lincoln, left New York last Tuesday to be gone ten days or more on location in the Adirondacks. Miss DeRemer's latest part was the title role in Gaumont's "His Temporary Wife."

There was a very big scene under Emile Chautard's supervision at the Paragon studio the other day, but we couldn't discover any particulars because Mr. Chautard was in the projection room and we couldn't wait for him. It's a safe guess that it had to do with another mystery story, however.

Eddie Carewe, who has been directing Metro features until quite recently, is now substituting for Albert Capellani in a Pathe production starring Dolores Cassinelli. Mr. Capellani, it seems, was in great haste to return to France, and so Mr. Carewe agreed to take his place until he, too, goes abroad in a few month time. The whole company went to South Norwalk, Conn., for exteriors, this past week end.

Raoul A. Walsh is directing his brother George at the Fox Eclair studio in Fort Lee. There is to be a large scene including a thousand extras the latter part of this week. All the supers in N. Y. will probably be engaged.

William Farnum is working on a most effective set in his production of "If I Were King." The whole studio is banked with trees and shrubbery and marble statues and blazing torches, until it vividly recalls stories of Nero's reign. Fritz Leiber and Walter Law are among the cast, and J. Gordon Edwards is directing.

Ernest Truex is working on one of his monthly comedies for Paramount at the Universal Studio, under the direction of John J. Harvey. The story is "Too Good to be True," by Julia Mills.

Wesley Ruggles, recently with Vitagraph, is directing Owen Moore in his Selznick production, "Piccadilly Jim." There is a new comedian in the cast, Reginald Sheffield, who should certainly add to the merriment of the picture, and his work impressed us as being unusually finished.

June Elvidge is working on "The Poisoned Pen," a mystery melodrama, which affords her wide scope for her emotional ability. Mr. August is "wielding the megaphone" theoretically, speaking normally, in reality.

A scene from the Universal production, "Loot"

Earle Metcalf received a fan letter the other day inquiring for the quickest way to get into the movies. Earle had visions of a speed cop defying car, an overwhelming rush past the door man, and a pose between stars and camera so instantaneous that the latter would go on registering before the interference was possible. Mr. Duprez has illustrated this mental picture with some uproariously funny photographs, ending the episode very practically by showing the ambitious one being propelled from the studio by a dozen pairs of feet.

Robert Milasch, of the J. Stuart Blackton forces, wishes it understood that his name is Robert and not Richard, as he became christened in some unaccountable manner in the studio. They even went so far as to call him Dick, but he doesn't intend to answer to anything but Bob. He played in "The Moonshine Trail" and "Dawn."

It is said that the Mack Sennett Bathing irls appearing in conjunction with the presentation of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" are remarkably versatile. Before taking up their present duties, their forces included a dentist, a school teacher, a secretary and a pianist and goodness knows what else.

Interviewing a Helpless Hero

"SORRY I can't shake hands with you," said Wilfred Lytell, about facing very quickly so that we might see his arms tightly tied behind his back, "and I must say that it's mighty awkward to try to talk this way, but I guess there's no help for it. We won't be through before midnight, as it is."

We followed the juvenile lead in "The Isle of Jewels," to an advantageous position for watching all subsequent action, and looked on with approval. The set was the interior of a lone cabin on some desert isle, and the lovely heroine was already seated in horrified helplessness, likewise bound and gagged, and wondering what was going to happen next. Worn fish nets hung on the walls, and various chests, that might have contained almost anything, lined the walls.

"You see," Mr. Lytell, (yes, he's Bert's brother, and looks exactly like him) explained, "we're chasing some valuable jewels, and we know they're here, but we're having quite some difficulty getting at them. In a few moments I shall be tied to that wall and tortured by having a real, live scorpion hung just over my head by a piece of wet rope. As the water seeps into the rope, it will lengthen gradually and the scorpion will creep nearer and nearer to my face until it finally reaches me."

"Horrors!" we shivered, "and where is the scorpion, if you please?"

"Over in that box. There's three of them, and they've been an awful bother. We had to send out west for them, and all but three died on the way here. They were delayed somewhere, and we're afraid now that the survivors will perish also before we finish with them."

"And how do you like picture work," we asked, "didn't we see you last winter in 'Business Before Pleasure'?"

"Yes, you did, and before that I was in 'Captain Kidd, Jr.' and H. B. Harris' production of 'The Country Boy.' I like both stage and screen work and I think it's fine training to alternate as I've been doing. Pictures have a great fact in their favor, though, namely, when we don't work too late at night, I can go down to my little place on Long Island."

Wilfred Lytell, leading man

Then he went on to assure us that actors are quite human, after all, and long for a real home just as ardently as everybody else does. He looked like quite a human person, albeit a very young one. We thought he ought to be out rooting for some baseball team, and, in spare moments, cramming for entrance exams to some university. We don't believe he enjoyed being interviewed one little bit.

"I don't know what to say," he exclaimed, "I'll tell you, I'll leave it to you, and you make up whatever you want to."

"Well, at least tell us how to pronounce your name," we demanded, "and then we won't bother you any more, for we can see that you have quite enough to fill one person's attention in getting through with this scene. But we would like to know about the name, because the telephone operator didn't even recognize you from our pronounciation."

"It's Ly—to rhyme with cry—tell," he told us, with the accent the same on both syllables, "but I get called everything. 'Ly-tell' accent strongly on 'tell.' 'Ly-tle' accent on 'Ly,' etc. but I don't mind so long as I know they mean me."

So when we see Mr. Lytell's jolly smile and vigorous energy called into play in Arthur Beck's first serial, we'll be glad that we have the best authority for the way we pronounce his name.

Burton King, Who Unearths the Thrills

"A THRILL every minute is what the film fan demands of serials nowadays," says Burton King, vice-president and director-general of Wistaria Productions, Inc.

"The photoplay serial is the result of suggestion and suggestion plays an important part in its making. The success of the magazine serial story, with each installment ending in suspense, gave birth to the idea that a photoplay could follow the same construction in a series of related episodes.

"Everyone knows how quickly the serial idea caught on. Within a short time the supply was lagging far behind the demand and it wasn't long before the photoplay audience, fed up on serial thrills, demanded that each episode provide more thrills than are found in the average six-reel feature."

Mr. King is now engaged in supervising the direction of "The Lurking Peril," a fifteen-episode Wistaria serial, in which Anne Luther and George Larkin are co-starred. Seven of the episodes have been completed with such success that the South America and Orient rights have already been sold.

"Although Lloyd Lonergan and George Larkin collaborated in writing the story frame work of 'The Lurking Peril,' the scenario has practically written itself as we have gone along.

"In serial making, the staging of one stunt will suggest another. We film a scene and then we go into consultation and Mr. Lonergan and Mr. Larkin devise the links that will bind another thrill to the main thread of the story. This, I have found by long experience, is far and away the best method in serial making.

"For instance, our original story called for the hero to engage in a fight at the mouth of an old well. The fight ends with the combatants falling into the well, where the hero strangles his opponent and climbs to safety by bracing himself against the stone walls.

"In working out this stunt we got the idea for a lighthouse stunt, with Miss Luther having a fight in the tower, then diving into the sea and swimming to safety. It was a sort of reverse action suggestion.

"In the earlier days of serial making, either of these two stunts would have provided the one necessary thrill for an episode. In 'The Lurking Peril' we used both of them and three others in one eposide.

Where to Find the Screen Celebrities : : : : :

"THE big little man in pictures" is the profession's nickname for Edward Small, of Edward Small, Inc., whose office at 1493 Broadway, is probably frequented by more film celebrities than any other one place in New York. Certainly, it is one of the busiest centers of activity that can be found even in our busy metropolis, and Mr. Small himself has his time so completely filled that he actually doesn't bother to tell you about it. He is the sort of person who does an enormous amount of work without being greatly impressed by his own energy, and would much rather enjoy himself in a few moments of leisure than worry about emphasizing a self-evident fact.

After tactfully excusing himself to three leads and two popular ingenues, cutting short a telephone conversation that threatened to extend over one minute, and instructing his secretary that, under no circumstances, was he to be disturbed for the next fifteen minutes, he sat down one afternoon recently to tell us a few beliefs that he holds about the Motion Picture Industry.

"Possibilities in the picture field are still unlimited," he declared, "and I believe that everyone who holds any sort of job in the industry need have no fear for the future, as there is a splendid career ahead of him. But I know from experience that human nature demands a continual change, particularly when it is seeking entertainment, and the need for new faces on the stage and screen will always be insistent. With that idea in mind I have taken under contract about fifteen girls and men, some of whom I am certain will be heard from in the not far distant future. Of course I shall further their interests in every possible way, because I am sure they will make enviable names for themselves in a few years. The lives of picture stars must necessarily be shorter even than those of stage favorites, for, where legitimate actors are seen at most once a year, the film players are producing from six to ten or twelve pictures a year. That means that no matter how great the popularity, the public will inevitably tire of the star's mannerisms and personalities and demand others to take their places. I am making it my business to fill that demand, partially, at least, and it is extremely interesting work.

"Of course, I am also casting daily for big productions and pictures of every sort. The change of attitude on the part of the producers since I first started this line of work is more encouraging than anything else. They are more than willing now to have my advice and help in casting, and frequently I select an entire company, even deciding the amounts of their salaries. I think it is safe to assert that I know everyone ever seen on the stage or screen, as well as the person's artistic and commercial value. I know who is working and who isn't, and when a call comes for a certain type, I ask specific questions about the part required and try to visualize it carefully so that I can suggest the right person at once and waste no time trying out unsuitable players."

Mr. Small is tremendously enthusiastic about motion pictures, although he does not go so far to say that the screen will ever replace stock companies and road shows in small towns.

"Each is a distinct form of amusement," he said, "and neither will ever interfere with the other. Ten-twenty-thirty picture shows are catering to audiences who seldom or never went to legitimate performances, because they couldn't afford it. People who enjoy musical comedy and the warmth and light and personal magnetism that never can be gotten over by any picture, no matter how good, will continue to patronize musical comedies so long as they can pay the price of admission. While families who used to stay at home and gossip, for the want of funds to buy theatre tickets, now fill the smaller picture houses. So will serious drama and good pictures always have their own clientele."

Needless to say, Mr. Small has been associated at one time or another with every known form of amusement, from circus to sideshows. He has acted himself, although as he says, he discovered his limitations early enough to develop his talents along more profitable lines. He has the successful showman's instinct and intuitive judgment concerning plays and players, and he is emphatically making good in his chosen line of "Salesman to the Motion Picture World." He not only casts the players, but he will furnish the story or scenario or play, if you ask him to, as he has established a literary department in connection with his booking office.

As a parting comment on the film industry, he asserted laughingly: "Why, if you want to follow the growth of the picture business, you have only to watch the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. It's a veritable thermometer of the industry's progression. Several years ago, it was about so thick," he measured an eighth inch between his fingers) "while nowadays—well, last week's issue was like this, wasn't it?" (the fingers widened to about two inches) "and it's indispensable information, too."

Will Rogers, Goldwyn cowboy star, asserts that although he has been a benedict for fourteen years, he still is one of the most bashful men who ever had to be photographed in a final close-up. Mrs. Rogers tells that Will rode around her home nine times before he summed up courage to enter with a proposal, and then might not have done so if his horse had not stumbled and thrown him precipitously into a porch rocking chair, beside her.

Antonio Moreno is looking for a Spanish photoplay suitable for a feature production. If anyone has a story in which bull fights, chile con carne, hot tamales or senoritas figure prominently, Tony might be interested in the film rights. At present he is a secret service man in Vitagraph's "The Invisible Hand," being produced in and around Hollywood.

EXHIBITOR PERFECTS ONE-MAN BAKERY

C. R. JONES, expert machinist and former exhibitor, who operated a number of theatres and disposed of them to big interests, has perfected a one-man automatic bakery, and with complete outfits and accessories necessary to their operation, has now opened a sales department to dispose of these complete Bakeries, under the name of New Era Systems. The New Era oven bakes 120 loaves of delicious, well-baked bread every 35 minutes. Under Mr. Jones' direction, 24 hours' instruction is all that is necessary for any individual to bake bread—the same kind Mr. Jones bakes.

J. Anthony Roach, Fox scenario writer, has just completed a novel and original story for Albert Ray and Elinore Fair, which is soon to be produced under the name of "A Flash-in-the-Pan Man."

George E. Periolat, who for several years has had prominent character parts in practically every production made at the American studio in Santa Barbara, has shaken the dust of that city from his feet and has arrived in Los Angeles for an engagement in a forth-coming Famous Players-Lasky production. Upon completion of this he will be engaged, it is said, in support of Mary Miles Minter when that Realart star arrives in California for a new picture.

A Virginia Pearson Release

Pathe Schedules "Impossible Catherine"; Excellent Cast Supports Star

IN offering "Impossible Catherine" for release, Pathe believes that this Virginia Pearson attraction is one that surpasses in theme, variety, interest and lavishness of settings, any previous feature in which the star appeared.

Unique in story, as the title suggests, the vehicle is said to give Miss Pearson ample chance to demonstrate her prowess in the outdoor sports as well as in the more or less ardent indoor sport of supporting women's rights and using vace woman s methods in handling men.

Director James O'Brien whose efforts in "The Bishop's Emeralds" brought forth so much favorable comment, swings from surprise to surprise in his direction and utilizes the many-sided interests and talents of the star—going from the charming society miss, to the militant public-spirited woman to the athletic girl and daring aviatrix.

The presence of William Davidson, the male lead opposite Miss Pearson, is not only a sign of the strength of the supporting cast of "Impossible Catherine," but brings this actor back to the screen with war laurels in aviation still crowning his brow. This is the first picture in which he appeared since his return from service.

Besides William Davidson, the cast includes Sheldon Lewis—the serial star—and Edward Roseman, Johnnie Walker and others, making Miss Pearson's support well-known to exhibitors and fans.

The story is an original theme by Frank Beresford and takes the society Miss with advanced ideas on men and affairs and places her in many dramatic, humorons and strenuous situations.

Pathe recommends "Impossible Catherine" as something new, novel and different.

It is announced the Tempest-Cody series was given its first release on September 1 October 6 had previously been set as the date.

After a lapse of nearly eighteen months which he spent in the U. S. army, Jimmie Harrison again comes on the screen featured in a Christy Comedy with Ethel Lynne, the title being "Reno—All Change."

First Logue Story Is "The Red Virgin"

"The Red Virgin" has been selected as the title for the first of a series of stories written by Charles A. Logue which B. A. Rolfe will present in picture form through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc. Preparations for the picturization of the story have practically been completed and actual "shooting" is to be started immediately.

In beginning the production of "The Red Virgin," the Fischer organization effects its new production plan, announced last week, of alternating a series of original stories by Mr. Logue with the series of Robert W. Chambers stories, on which the company has concentrated its efforts since its formation.

Intimate Items About People You Know

There is an unusually good story on "Money in the Movies" in the current Everybody's Magazine. Herbert Corey, the author, has corraled figures from somewhere to explain the scope of the industry. Whether or not these figures with their multiplicity of ciphers are exact or can stand the closest scrutiny it is difficult to state. At least they are convincing.

Foreign sales of Automatic Ticket Selling Machines are to be handled by the Trans-Regional Trading Company, with offices at 47 West Forty-second Street. Jesse L. Bernstein is in charge.

E. F. Dibelius, formerly engineer-in-charge with the New York Edison Company, is handling Mazda Projection lamps in the New York district.

J. Esten Bolling, of the Carrier Engineering Company, has completed his vacation and returned to his desk.

We have just received a postcard from the Prizma expedition to Africa, stating that the members were looking forward to the crossing of the Equator within a few days.

The wind that swirls around and about those engaged in motion picture producing, projecting and exhibiting is always full of rumors. There's one going the rounds now that a prominent projection manufacturer will shortly surprise the little world interested in such devices, with a brand new machine, employing many dewdads and gadgets hitherto seen only in dreams.

Perhaps this wonderful new machine will be an answer to the wail of one of our readers published a few weeks ago in this section, and asking why someone didn't put out a real projection machine Who knows?

One of the reporters on a Brooklyn paper referred to the projection rooms in the new Brooklyn Strand as "a suite of two rooms with kitchenette." The appellation is well given. All the place lacks is a phonograph and a well upholstered davenport.

The Fidelity Electric Co., of Lancaster, Pa., reports that they are having excellent success in their sales of small constant speed motors for use on projection machines. Most of the motors sold for this purpose are of the 1-10 h. p. capacity and have an arrangement for speed control that allows a variation of 50%.

Last Week We Met—C. F. Bateholts

THEATRE patrons have many times become disgusted at the attempts of manufacturers to inflict advertising films on them under the guise of "Educationals."

But there is one man, C. F. Bateholts, who has been quietly producing films which under less capable hands would surely be labelled advertising, but instead under his guidance have qualified with the best "Educationals."

Mr. Bateholts, who is with the General Electric Co., saw the possibilities of explaining the electric industry by motion pictures if rightly handled. But instead of going out into the field to find out how other companions were carrying out similar schemes he centered his investigation on his own particular conditions. In this way he avoided the pitfalls of others.

Progress was slow, intentionally so. As each picture was made, its faults were found and plans laid to avoid similar ones in the next film. Each release has thus been better than the preceding one and consequently more successful when exhibited.

So far, Mr. Bateholts has personally superintended every detail in the production of each film from the camera through the laboratory and cutting room. But his department has grown so rapidly that it will be soon necessary to unshoulder many of the less important details.

He has shown extraordinary skill in selecting subjects of greatest value to exhibitors. Instead of planning his subjects with his employer mainly in mind, he works to the whims and tastes of the public. And therein lies his success in "getting across" his educational films.

The latest picture produced under his direction was titled "The Queen of the Waves" and traced the development of water travel from the log canoe to the latest electrically driven dreadnaught, the "New Mexico." Mr. Bateholts' pictorial method of showing the mechanical operation of a huge dreadnaught is a marvel of simplicity and explains a difficult subject for the most elementary of minds.

It is safe to say that the success he has attained so far will be eclipsed when his future films are exhibited. His policy of "constant improvement" coupled with the continual study of the requirements of his field insures progress in the art.

If anyone can make a success of Educational films Bateholts is the man.

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

Copple of the Master Machine Tool Co. has returned from a short vacation and is fully primed to take up the task of filling orders for the new Master machine.

G. W. Perkins, of the Perkins Electric Co., of Montreal, was seen in the elevator of the Godfre Building the latter part of last week.

Dr. H. P. Gage of the Corning Glass Works, and one of the authors of the book, "Optic Projection," was a welcome visitor at the office last Friday. Dr. Gage was in New York to attend an important test on the "Conaphore" auto headlight, the principle of which he discovered and developed.

Another expert also walked across our doormat during the week. This time it was H. C. Streychmans, of the Palisades Laboratory. Streychmans has built up an organization on the other side of the Hudson that is making a name for itself in the quality of work being turned out. He not only knows laboratory procedure, but he is thoroughly acquainted with the whole film game from marketing to exhibiting.

M. H. Behrends is a New York visitor from Chicago. Mr. Behrends is connected with the Movie Supply Co. in the Windy City and has come to Broadway to get a line on some new "lines." He is a brother of E. R. Behrends of the Motion Picture Supply Co., the man who has lately brought out the new Interchangeable Box Office Sign.

C. M. Rellihen, representing the Franco-American Chemical Corporation of Chicago, dropped in for a few minutes to show us his latest line of laboratory chemicals. Rellihen is a small one as height goes, but his size has nothing whatsoever and absolutely to do with his selling ability.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

An Advocate of Licensing Tells of Outrages in Small Town Theatres

He Cites One Case Where the "Operator" Made Rain by the Yard

MUCH of the criticism shot at the "small towner" has been unfair. In some city theatres careless handling of films causes as much damage as in several times the number of small town theatres because of the fact that the city house gets newer films. But in the letter printed below, Mr. Kemp describes a truly disgraceful condition existing in a certain Florida theatre, which ought to be brought to the attention of machine manufacturer, fire authorities, town officials and—we were going to say Film Exchanges—but it is doubtful if they would be at all interested.

Technical Editor:

It has been quite a while since I have knocked for admission to your valuable department, but nevertheless I have been a silent reader and feel that have been greatly benefited by the projection department of the NEWS.

My subject to you at this writing is going to be on the greatest evil I think the entire Motion Picture Industry is confronted with—so her goes.

You will admit that at the present time there are more elaborate productions being made than has ever been heretofore. There are greater stars drawing greater salaries than the world has ever known. There are great directors, cameramen. In fact there are artists in every line of a production. Can these great productions be made without the work of these great artists? Would the producing companies spend millions in securing these artists if they knew it was not essential?

Now my idea as to the producing part of the industry is where it should be, so I will say nothing further about it. But are the distributing companies doing their part? Are the State officials doing their part? Are the managers doing their part?

Now let us see how all this adds up. Sometime ago I was in ————, Florida, a town of five or six thousand population and I was invited by the manager ? to take a look at his projection room ? ? ? After climbing the ladder—I reached the "palace de luxe." Now I won't say anything about the physical condition of this "garden of dreams" and will let you form your own opinion—but to get back to our subject I discovered the projection machine. Of course, I could tell you how nice and sharp all the teeth of the sprockets were and lots of other things but will only mention this. The operator—yes, operator—not projectionist, had removed his upper magazine (I suppose it was in his way). Of course, thoughtfully, he left the spindle to receive the reel of film. Then he finds that his reel revolves too fast and puts his genious brains to thought and brings out the following. He fastens a hinge upon the wall directly in front of the reel. He then takes a piece of timber 1 x 1 and fasten one end of the hinge upon the wall and the other end rests upon the film, also a weight was attached to the piece of timber to give him his desired "tension."

Of course should he reel off Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs" or a Charley Chaplin special his audience is "delighted to receive a beautiful shower of "rain." However, after he has put the finishing touches to the production, which the producer so thoughtlessly left out, he then ships it to the following town on the circuit and their audiences receive the benefit of this "genius" and so on until this production has completed it's circuit.

I was in another town and a manager told me that he was having trouble with his "operator." If I hadn't known he was the manager of the local theatre I would not have known whether it was his telephone or jitney bus operator he was speaking of. Taking it for granted that he wanted a man to take charge of his projection, I asked him what salary he would pay and he told me that he would pay eighteen dollars for a first class man. He was paying his present man fifteen but that he would be willing to pay that much for a good man.

But to get back to our subject again. When a film salesman books a production to a theatre he does not find out whether his production will be run through a projection machine or a sausage mill—he doesn't care. Neither does he find out whether there is a kid in the projection room or a first class projectionist. It's all the same to him as he gets as much out of the picture one way as the other. In large cities the manager of a theatre is compelled to employ competent projectionists. In smaller towns the manager can put a*nything* they want to in charge of the projection. You would think it was mighty queer if you were in a large city and was going to make a trip on the railway and that when you left this city you were riding behind an experienced engineer, but when you get to a smaller town upon the same railway and they take this experienced engineer off and put in his place a kid or a bonehead you would want to get off the train, wouldn't you? Of course, you would. Well, the people are doing the same thing in every state and I feel that a human life is just as valuable in a small town as it is in a large city (if property isn't). Not only that but these boobs tear up the films and then ship them to a first class theatre to use after them, making the fire risk much more than it would be if they were in good condition.

This is one of the most serious troubles that is confronting the industry today and until the time comes when the film exchanges and state officials can be made to see it—we are powerless to check it. I firmly believe that every man in a projeection room should be licensed by the state, whether he be in New York City or a town of a thousand inhabitants and any theatre that cannot afford to hire a first class projectionist does not deserve to stay in the business.

Mr. Editor if you are in a position to get this movement started you will be doing the most noble work that the industry has ever known.

With very best wishes, I remain,

Very truly,

E. G. KEMP,
Chief Projectionist.

Questions N'Everything

A. G. S. of Dresden, Tenn., asks a set of questions:

1. Please give me the latest dope to coat a slide so that it can be written on with a stylus or nail.

2. Why, if so, does the amperage effect the distance of lamp house from aperture plate.

3. Will the Mazda be O. K. for a 75 ft. throw, with 110 volt, 60 cycle a. c.? My voltage and amperage vary a great deal. My lamp will have anywhere from say a ½" to a 3" flame. The "juice" is soaked to me up and down all at once. There is no ammeter or voltmeter in town.

4. What ballasts, controls and so forth do the projection machine manufacturers furnish with their machines?

5. Will you give me a wiring diagram for Mazda? I remember that I have seen a lot of IF's about Mazda, but I cannot find the back copies with the information in them.

Reply:—That is the way the editor likes to see the questions come in. There is no chance here to misunderstand the writer. He has put his questions in a perfectly plain manner. They will be answered likewise.

1. The material you refer to is called "Opaque." Send to any theatre supply house and get a bottle of it. The cost is slight. Look in the advertising columns of back numbers of the NEWS and you will see slide outfits advertised.

There are also manufactured what are called "slide pencils." These pencils write as well on glass as a common pencil on paper. They come in different colors which allows of certain effects on the slide.

We do not know of a formulae for "Opaque," but it is doubtful if it would pay you to concoct it yourself when it can be bought so cheap in the market.

2. The amperage does not affiect the distance of lamp house from aperture plate. The focal length of your condensers does that.

3. With conditions as you have them you had better keep away from Mazda. There may soon be some automatic regulators on the market which will take care of a certain voltage variation, but it is doubtful if they would be of any use on your circuits.

Using the present hand regulators you would surely be out of luck. It would be necessary for you to keep one hand on the adjusting handle all the time your lamp was lighted. Until your voltage quicts down you'd better think more of arc controllers and less of Mazda lamps.

4. Projection machine manufacturers furnish nothing outside the projector unless ordered. You buy each and every piece of equipment as a separate item.

5. For your answer to this question please watch this department for the next few weeks. We intend to publish wiring diagrams for Mazda when used with different types of regulators and off different supply circuits.

Over-loaded Switch

I AM having a little trouble here with one of my machines regarding the arc wire leads. I have a semi-portable machine; i. e., a Powers 6A head on a wooden base, with an Edison lamp. It's a good old apparatus when there is nothing wrong with it. It reminds me of a little joke I heard a few days ago, when a negro mother had a son, and he was so dark his mother had to feed him onions so she could find him at night. I don't know what to do to find the trouble I am having.

I have one line coming into the projection room, carrying 110 volts of A. C. current, and that line branching off to feed two transformers, both Fort Waynes. I am getting 60 amps. out of each one, so that when I have two arcs lit simultaneously there is 120 amps. being taken out of the line. The line that feeds to the other regular Powers' equipment does not get hot, but this semi-portable outfit, the switch-box gets so hot that it cannot be touched, and even some of the sealing wax has run out of the botom. I have examined everything, looking for either a short circuit or a ground, but either of them is not to be found. Kindly let me have your idea of what you think might be the trouble.

Another, when I light these two arcs, the fuse sometimes blow, thus showing there is something wrong, for this should not occur. The main line for these two transformers is fused at 60 amps., but two arcs at 60 amps. each would be taking out 120 amps. Is this fuse strong enough, or should a stronger one be employed? I have a good mind of fusing the lines before the wires reach the machine switch. Do you think this a good stunt? If so, what ampere fuse would you recommend as being best?

In using D. C. for striking two arcs a Ballast Resistor is used. Could not two transformers be connected in multiple, thus giving all the amperage one would want and thus get two arcs by using this Resistor, using the handles on the transformers as sort of a rheostat?

Awaiting to see these questions answered in the Projection Department of the "News,' and thanking you, I beg to remain.

Very truly yours.

(Signed) Jacob Sheets.
Projectionist Lyric Theatre.

Answer:

The switch on your portable machine was not made to carry 60 amperes and you are overheating it by using it to carry that current. Remove it from the machine and get another one of 75 amps. to replace it.

You are wrong in regard to the current taken from the line by two arcs. Although it is true that you are using 120 amperes with two arcs, you are not drawing this current from the line because of the Fort Wayne Compensarcs.

The ratio of transformation of your compensarcs from the supply voltage to arc voltage also affects the current but exactly opposite to the voltage. That is, if the voltage ratio is 2 to 1 the current ratio is 1 to 2. This means that the line current would be but one-half the arc current. Thus you see that because you are using 120 amps, at your arcs you are not drawing this current from the line.

Since you say that "the fuse sometimes blows" you are evidently working too close to the capacity of your fuse. Replace the 60 amp. fuses by some 75 amp. capacity and you will have no further trouble.

It might not be a bad idea to fuse the separate machine circuits. Trouble which developed in one machine would then be unlikely to blow your main line fuses, in this way putting both machines out of commission. But if you do fuse machine circuits, place your fuse block between the compensarc and the main line, not between compensarc and machine. A 40-amp. fuse ought to be sufficient for this purpose.

We have repeated many times in these columns the fact that transformers cannot be used in multiple to run two arcs. But why bother with the multiple connections if you have the two transformers? Use them as you are using them now—one compensarc to each arc—and you will get best results.

Griffin Tells of Experience in Russia

THE greater part of the work of the "lab" consisted of title making. When films were received from America the English titles were removed, the words translated into Russian, the title photographed, the strip developed and printed, then inserted into its rightful place in the story. There were some commercial films that were copied for distribution amongst the native workmen and there were some "tropicals" taken and arranged for the screen in this little laboratory not many miles away from the Arctic Circle.

As has been mentioned before in the interview, Mr. Griffin made his headquarters at Vladivostok. At that place the "Y" took over an old Customs building for an International Hut. The structure was 250 ft. long, 90 ft. wide and 25 ft. high. Mr. Griffin tells of the shows which were put on in this huge building:

"There was an auditorium at one end of the building and a gymnatium at the other. Sometimes one end was occupied and sometimes the other. We wanted to arrange our Power's machine so that we could put on a show at either end, according to which of the ends was not in use at the time. This was made possible by constructing our booth exactly in the center of the room and arranging our machine so that it could be pointed either way. Port-holes were cut in both sides of the booth which was built of brick and therefore strictly fireproof.

"We had need of a power plant in this place so we gathered the apparatus. Our prime mover was a 25 year old Swedish kerosene engine of the hit-or-miss type which we got from Kamchatka. Our 24 kw. shunt wound generator we got from the Russian Islands. We made a switchboard from the bottom of an old pool table and we got our belts and pulleys from Japan. Strange as it may seem this odd power plant worked like a charm and when I came away there was no up-to-date power plant in New York City that could beat it for smooth operation."

Mr. Griffin left the Nicholas Power Company slightly over 17 months ago. Since that time he has traveled many thousands of miles throughout Siberia, seeing that the soldiers and peasants in out of the way places were entertained by motion pictures. Wherever the freight car with its power plant could be taken a show was given. The usual "paper" was put out just as theatres do it in this country. These displays always drew crowds, many of the members of which had never before seen a moving picture. Mr. Griffin's work was valued by Gen. Graves, Commander of the American Forces in that district as is proved by the official pass which the general gave Mr. Griffin allowing him to travel to any point in the district under his command. The worth of the motion picture bureau as a means of stimulating morale was proved without doubt.

Mr. Griffin arrived in this country a few days ago. The work he commenced in Siberia is still going on. When he left, the "Y" sent over a Mr. Martin and seven other men to do virtually the work that Mr. Griffin had been doing alone, in order that the morale of the fighting forces in that desolate country might be maintained.

Wants To Go West

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

Am a reader of the Projection Department in the News, and I believe these columns are the best friend the operator has. Would like to ask a little information about a good locality for an operator. It has always been my desire to go West. Would like to know the chances for an operator out there. Have always heard that the chances for a young man were much better out West in other lines but not in the line of projection. "Reel" life has grown within me so I could never quit and would like to take the best chances. Am thanking you for any information in this line. I also wish to thank the News for all the advice and pleasure I have received in reading the Projection Department columns.

Am truly yours,

Comment:

Old H. Greeley was advertising manager for the West long before C. Francis Jenkins had assembled his first projector, hence Horace's advice of "Go West Young man," could hardly be applied to the young and ambitious projectionist.

There are chances for the projectionist everywhere, in the North, South, East and West. The opportunities are in exact proportion to the man's ability, initiative, honesty and general intelligence. More and more theatres are employing "chief's of projection." Companies operating a string of theatres must have "chiefs," who do no actual pro-

Carbon Set and Condenser

Technical Editor:

I am running one 30 amp. D. C. single arc machine. Carbons 7/8 cored upper, 1/2 solid lower. Have 70 foot throw and get a picture 9' x 12' from a 5¼ lens.

I have a 6½ condenser towards arc and a 7½ on other side toward slide or film.

I warm up the arc on A. C. and if I arc them apart 1/8" the arc jumps to the top of the condensor mount and cracks the condenser. The arc is about 2" from the condenser now. If I could get a set of condensers that would let my arc back an inch or more I would be O. K. If you know of any make please tell me.

Answer: Try your machine with a 7½" condenser nearest the arc. This should allow you to draw back your lamp far enough to stop condenser trouble.

You are also using the wrong carbon set. For 30 amps. d. c. use a 5/8" cored upper and a 5-16" metal coated solid lower. Better set your carbons right before making any other changes, then if you are not satisfied, get a 7½" condenser and use it in place of your present 6½".

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

At Last Cooperation from Exchanges

Technical Editor, Motion Picture News:

This is the first time I have attempted such a letter, but I have a wonderful little exhibit which I wish to send to you. After reading it (the exhibit) you will agree with me that it surely ought to be a money saver for the exchange.

This little money saver seems to have received its start in the famous mill city of Minneapolis. But I suppose some one in the "Famous Players" thought of this wonderful idea.

Oh, those great things that "Famous Players" were going to do for the exhibitor. They said they were making a study of his needs, his wants. etc. It was even reported that they went so far into these studies that the exhibitor could have his operator inspect films for them (the exchanges). He has nothing to do, you know, until 7 P. M. so he might as well do that as anything. What???

Please note the words: "This will not only help you. . . ." Isn't that another nice little tip? Sure it will help the poor projectionist. If he didn't examine the films he might find one reel of the five-reeler left out and an old travelogue sandwiched in in its place. The projectionist who gets films with one of those notices in among them surely does want to look them over, for if he doesn't. . . . Zip and his screen is white for several minutes. Yes, I think their advice is good. . . .?

It is not a case of shortage of help. It's a shortage of inspectors, due to the salaries paid. Inspectors want money for their services and the exchanges cannot hire help as they used to. Girls can make more money elsewhere.

But the poor exhibitor pays real money for service. He pays more than he used to because rates have advanced and production costs have increased. And what happens. The exhibitor is asked to pay for film inspection besides. Probably if the exchange were to be asked what had made the rentals of film increase it would say that "cost of inspection had increased." Looks and sounds funny doesn't it?

And then looks at the way the notice ends.

"THANKS FOR CO-OPERATION."

In other words, "Thanks, Mr. Exhibitor, for doing our work for us."

What do you make of it?

PLEASE NOTICE!

Owing to a shortage of help in our Inspection Department THESE FILMS are probably not thoroughly inspected. Please have your operator carefully inspect each reel before screening. This will not only help you but will be a big help to us and will be greatly appreciated. Thanks for co-operation.

Famous Players Lasky Corporation,
Minneapolis, Minnesota.

This in-FAMOUS note will be sent to the Main Office of F. P. L. C. so that the men "way up" may have a chance to see what their Minneapolis branch is doing. Probably nothing will come from it; the men in charge know that it isn't right, but as long as only the projectionist (who to the exchange manager is only a necessary evil) kicks they never bat an eye-lash. If a few influential managers of houses would take up cudgels and go after the exchanges who are pulling off these cheap practices something might be gained.

A good many projectionists make it a practice of calling the conditions of films to the attention of the manager. Then if anything goes wrong up in the projection room, part of the blame at least will go to the film instead of having all of it find a resting place on the shoulders of the projectionists.

Suppose an exchange manager should buy a suit of clothes and the clothier should say to him.

"Now, old man, I'm not sure that this suit is finished. Perhaps one leg of the trousers is missing, or there may be no buttons on the vest. But don't let that worry you. Just fix it up yourself like a good little man. Our tailors would like to dot it for you but they really haven't the time. Do it yourself or better still make your wife sew on the buttons or attach another pedal extremity. You'll be helping us out so much. And—THANKS FOR THE CO-OPERATION."

CO-OPERATION!

Exchanges don't know what the word means.

And furthermore they won't learn until some one in the producing companies inform themselves as to conditions in the exchanges and do considerable human housecleaning.

CO-OPERATION? Nothing to it.

Picture is Dull

H. D. Robertson, of the Princess theatre, Fayetteville, Tenn., asks for help:

"I am having a little trouble with my Simplex machine. I can not seem to get a clear picture. Am pulling 60 amp. at the arc. I know that my shutter is set true, lenses are clean and will focus but still the picture has a dull look. I am using 6½ and 7½ condensers in lamp house.

"Throwing a 60-foot picture, size something about 9 x 11 or maybe a little larger.

"My Powers machine sets next to Simplex, and it throws a good clear picture. I have reset shutter, tried focusing a dozen times and cleaned lens so often I don't think it could be caused from them.

"Please let me hear from you at once."

Reply: Your trouble is undoubtedly in the lens system. If you have not examined your condensers do so and see that all surfaces are clean and free from smoke or dirt. Examine the M. P. lens to be certain that the elements are in their proper relation.

Since you say that the focus is all right, you probably have the correct objective for your conditions. The difference then is in the illumination on the screen.

Perhaps someone else has had similar trouble and can give us the exact remedy.

Rusty Lamp House

A. F. No. 1111 wants to know "how machine manufacturers put lamp houses in good condition when they are returned to the factory after having been in a fire, flood, etc."

This is what one manufacturer does: First he takes a piece of very fine emery cloth and goes over the rusted parts until the surfaces have been made comparatively smooth. Then with cotton waste soaked in a mixture of oil and graphite he goes over the metal until the rusted spots have disappeared. The results are uniformly satisfactory.

The Excelsior Photo Lamp

THE Excelsior Photo Lamp is a new white flame studio light recently developed at the studio of the Adolf Philipp Film Corporation, New York City. It has been used there to the exclusion of all other makes of arcs for some time with excellent photographic results, and now that the finer details have been worked out to the satisfaction of the manufacturers the lamp will soon be placed on the market. It is probable therefore that users of studio lights will be interested in a general description of this new addition to the white flame arc family.

Fig. 1 gives a good idea of the construction of the lamp. By means of its sliding pedestal post it may be raised to a height of 10 ft. It weighs complete only 50 lbs. and can therefore be easily shifted around.

The arc itself is of the double trim, series type, with motor driven automatic feed. Either alternating or direct current at 110 volts can be used. The lamp is made in capacities of 25, 40, 65 and 100 amperes. Using special white flame copper-clad carbons, 6 in. in length, the lamp operates for three to four hours on one trimming. Specially designed and easily removed carbon holders allow the carbons to be burned down to 1 in. stubs.

Ventilation is secured by a high speed exhaust fan built into the case. Air is taken in around the globe and exhausted at one side of the lamp. The hand can be held on the opaque globe after several hours running thus demonstrating the adequateness of the air circulation. This same feature also safeguards the life of the globe as is proved by the twenty Excelsiors now used at the Philipps Studio, among which not a globe has been broken by heat since their installation.

The adaptibility of the lamp is remarkable. The Excelsior Lamp can be used as overhead lighting as well as stand lamp and effect lighting as it can be placed in any conceivable position, therefore it makes the Excelsior Lamp adaptable for all photographic purposes. The lamps are so balanced as to make them unnecessary to secure them in each new position.

An additional feature is the ease with which the lamp may be taken off the pedestal and carried to any location Photographically, the light rays have proved exceedingly satisfactory. Some of the best cinematographers have worked with the Excelsior Lamp, and have pronounced it superior to all others. The properties of the light rays are such, that cameramen and directors are able to work in the light without protective glasses. From an examination of the lamp, it would seem to be all that a studio lamp should be, minus many of the disadvantages of those now in use. It is portable, detachable, uses a minimum of current to produce a high illumination, and should withstand the hard usage encountered in studio application. It is well designed and constructed, and will no doubt be installed in studios all over the country, as soon as its merits are recognized.

Camera Speeds and Shutte Openings

CHAS. GEIS of Chicago asks the following questions: In reference to motion picture photography I wish to ask a question on that subject. Can you supply me with a scale showing the various openings a cinema camera can be set at; also the same opening in degrees and shutter speed at two turns per second and 1 to 1?

Answer: The standard speed is sixteen exposures per second. The shutter makes one complete revolution for each exposure. On this basis the shutter makes a complete turn-around in 1/16 seconds. If the shutter is opened to 180 degrees then the exposure must be one half of the total time required for a complete revolution of the shutter or 1/32 second.

To make the explanation simpler suppose we close our shutter to 90 degrees. With this arrangement light will be admitted to the film during one-quarter revolution of the shutter. The exposure then will be ¼ of 1/16 sec. or 1/64 seconds. In other words the exposure is directly proportional to the degrees opening. This makes the computations easy.

Therefore at standard speed (two turns per second) the table is as follows:

Degrees opening	Speed
180	1/32
170	1/34
160	1/36
150	1/38
140	1/41
130	1/43
120	1/48
110	1/52
100	1/58
90	1/64
80	1/72
70	1/82
60	1/96
50	1/115
40	1/144
30	1/192
20	1/288
10	1/576

The same figures multiplied by 2 will give the speeds at different shutter openings when turning at the rate of one turn per second. The table would then read:

180	1/16	90	1/32
170	1/17	80	1/36
160	1/18	70	1/41
150	1/19	60	1/48
140	1/20	50	1/58
130	1/22	40	1/72
120	1/24	30	1/96
110	1/26	20	1/144
100	1/29	10	1/288

Westinghouse War Memorial Scholarships Awarded

THE awards of the four annual War Memorial Scholarships of five hundred dollars each, established by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, have just been announced. These awards were made by competitive examinations and the following men were successful:

Herbert S. Pahren, Cincinnati, Ohio, employed as order clerk in the Cincinnati Office of the Westinghouse Company, and a graduate of the Hughes High School, who has selected for his scholarship a Technical Engineering Course at the University of Wisconsin.

Arthur Marthens of East Pittsburgh, Pa., began work as a messenger boy before completing his studies in the Turtle Creek Schools. Mr. Marthens, while working in the Cost Department prepared himself in the Casino Technical Night School to enter college. He has chosen a course in Electrical Engineering at the Carnegie Institute of Technology.

Paul O. Langguth, a graduate of the Wilkinsburg High School and employed as draftsman in the Engineering Department at East Pittsburgh, has selected as his award an Electrical Engineering Course at the University of Pittsburgh.

Andrew P. Lesniak, a graduate of the Union High School, Turtle Creek, Pa., and employed in the Production Department at East Pittsburgh, has selected a course in Mechanical Engineering at the University of Pittsburgh.

Two classes of scholarship are provided:

(a) For sons of employes of the company or its subsidiaries who have been employed for five years or longer.

(b) For employes of the Company and its subsidiaries who have been continuously employed for at least two years and who shall not, on September 1, have exceeded the age of 23. Not more than two class B scholarships will be awarded in any year.

Each scholarship carries with it an annual payment of five hundred dollars for a period not to exceed four years, the payment to be applied toward an engineering education in any technical school or college selected by the successful candidate with the approval of the scholarship committee.

These scholarships have been established as a memorial to those employes of the Company and its subsidiaries who entered the service of their country during the war. Four awards will be made each year, so that after three years this Company will be maintaining sixteen of these scholarships in the best Technical Schools of the United States.

Adding Color to Motion

By W. V. D. Kelley

A Paper Delivered at the Philadelphia Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers

NOT long ago I ran across this very interesting statement by Dr. Foote:

"The fact is, we have kept on discovering and forgetting, and then re-discovering, ever since man began to think."

I was not there when man began to think, so naturally I cannot verify this part of Dr. Foote's statement. I can testify, however, to the fact that in the field of natural color photography and color photography as applied to the motion picture, we have kept on discovering and forgetting and then re-discovering.

The records show that as far back as 1785 natural color photography was engaging the attention of men and science. Men discovered at that time; later, men forgot; and then men discovered again.

I have seen samples of work done by the "bleach-out" process which was first suggested in 1813 by A. Vogel.

In 1861 the modern theory of three-color photography came to be recognized, and during the succeeding forty-five years some progress was made, slow and halting to be sure, but nevertheless, progress, in developing processes for recording scenes in color.

In the year 1900, while I was residing in London, England, an American, Mr. Tripp, was demonstrating the McDonough process of color screen prints and later in that same winter I attended a lecture and demonstration of the Sanger-Shepherd process at the Royal Photographic Society.

At that time I was connected with the American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, and, therefore, motion picture photography and the possible application of adding color to motion was intensely interesting to me.

All of the different forms of producing natural color pictures were well known at that time, for we had the Lippman process, which is based on the interference of light waves; the McDonough, which is additive, and the Sanger-Shepherd, which is subtractive.

Mr. F. E. Ives was demonstrating his Kromscope, which is an additive process, while in our Mutoscope parlors we were showing in a penny slot machine six views of subtractive photographs made by Gaumont.

The first motion picture films in natural colors to receive any degree of publicity were those of Smith in 1906, which were fathered by Urban of international fame, although private showings of similar films had been given some time previous to that.

The shortcomings of that process led men to see possibilities of applying the Sanger-Shepherd method to Kinemacolor negatives, and their results were promptly recorded in the British Patent Office. Some of these patents have nearly expired, but none has yet been reduced to a working basis and none has been shown publicly to my knowledge.

So, you see, in speaking on the "subject of "Adding Color to Motion" we have a certain background of discovering and forgeting and rediscovering which will not permit any one at the present time to say that adding color to motion is an entirely new science.

In the British Journal of Photography, December 6, 1912, Mr. H. Quentin, referring to screen plates says: "And thus it is that in screen plate color photography the chief merit consists not in inventing a screen but in producing it commercially." In the making of Prizma pictures in natural colors, the industry with which I have been mainly identified for a number of years, our problem has been largely one of devising means and developing processes that would make motion pictures in natural colors commercially practicable.

Our main problems have been and will be in the improvements in practical working machinery, in standardizing the chemical steps necessary and in perfecting the process by close study and application to a continuous succession of details that will gradually improve the art of making commercial natural color motion picture films.

In a report for the Society of Chemical Industry in 1916, Mr. B. V. Storr, of the Ilford Company, London, said: "A number of patents have been published both for multicolor screens and for various details in the production of positives. In the latter, apart from the mechanical difficulties of registration, the chief problem appears to be to get a method of coloring which will give a uniform tone throughout the length of film."

We had considered for some time that other steps were of more importance in the making of Prizma films, but we found at last that our main stumbling block in making the present product finally proved to be the matter of coloring.

The successful making of small pieces of film by the known methods used in photography for toning or the patented descriptions of coloring methods were found to be impracticable when applied to the commercial handling of films in long lengths, so it became necessary to work out a new method and means for coloring. This we successfully accomplished.

Our problem contained several elements that required the development of new processes in order to accomplish the result of coloring long lengths of film commercially. The film may be 200 ft. long, in which length, as you know, there are 3,200 separate color transparencies, all very much alike with the exception of those parts showing the steps of movement. To make each picture exactly like the next and to duplicate the copies so that they are all alike, was the problem that had not been satisfactorily solved before.

In letterpress printing, if the copies vary, no damage is done, as one seldom sees many prints together for comparison and the poor ones are discarded.

With motion pictures there is not so much chance for discarding individual pictures, for if we did, the film would consist mostly of patches. This problem was overcome and film has been produced in quantity so that each individual image bearing area is substantially complete in colors which may be seen by holding the film in the hand.

The process finally adopted has not been described in print and probably will not be for some time to come.

COLOR RENDITION

I read that, "It is not possible for anyone to explain how or why we see colors, and probably it never will be." We have our theories which stand up well against practice, but are unable absolutely to check back and prove them out. A good portion of the audiences that view natural color pictures see colors at variance with what we term normal vision. Others attempt to judge colors from their own conception of what they should be. For example, the color of the waters of the Pacific Ocean varies from that of the Atlantic Ocean and to one who has not noted this difference by personal visit the color rendering may be judged to be unsatisfactory. Don't be hasty in forming your judgment as to the color correctness of a picture—your neighbor may be seeing it differently from you. I have seen a picture projected in which the color of certain flags appeared as orange to me, while to my associate they were pink. In other words, don't be too fussy. If the general result is pleasing to you, offer the necessary encouragement to the workers in this difficult field, for, after all, absolute correct color rendering is only one item in the many that go to make up a successful and commercial motion picture in colors and is more or less psychological anyway.

THE EXHIBITORS

In the British Journal of Photography of February 1, 1919, on page 8 of the supplement, there is added to an otherwise more or less correct statement the following:

"Altogether, it does not look as though the commercial prospects for additive processes of color cinematography are very encouraging. We have still to wait for the ideal color film which can be bought all complete by the yard and inserted for projection into the standard cinematograph lantern."

On December 28, 1918, Prizma began releasing weekly natural color films which can be "bought all complete by the yard and inserted for projection into the standard cinematograph lantern."

From the exhibitor's standpoint that is the big accomplishment; for all previous natural color films required either high projection speed, so high that such films only have one-third their normal life, or an attachment or a complete new projector. Nearly all of these forms in actual practice required the attention of a special trained operator from the home office, or what is just as troublesome, a course of instruction to the theatre operator, before the films could be left with safety and assurance of successful shows.

At this writing the films have shown in eighty cities of the United States, being distributed and handled as are the customary type of films. They are standing up well and I believe giving good satisfaction.

THE COLOR WORKER

For the information of those that like the "ins and outs" of the process employed will say:

The negatives are made through two sets of complementary colors, or, as we usually say, four colors.

The four color values are dyed in two colors. That is to say, the reds and oranges are dyed a red-orange color while the greens and green-blues are dyed a color complementary to the red-orange colors used.

In many subjects when the film is examined in the hand there is a noticeable difference in alternating images, in which case one will favor the green-blue and the succeeding image will favor green. These blend without pronounced flicker on projecting at the customary projection speed.

The projection is on the additive principle of mixing lights while the coloring is accomplished by the subtractive principle.

Registration of two images on the same area, done continuously in long lengths and consistently accurate is had to 1/10,000 of an inch. This, in spite of the fact that developed negatives shrink to an average of 1-16 of an inch in each foot, sometimes as much as ⅛ of an inch, while there is a corresponding shrinkage laterally. The fresh positive at the time of printing is still of standard width and length and consequently of different length and width as compared with the negative.

The above paragraphs place the matter before you in brief language. Rather than enlarge on each item by tearing to pieces and analyzing each step I have prepared a film that demonstrates most of the steps.

Once a Screw Hole, Always a Screw Hole

The Biggest Little Thing in the World

Some of the Reasons Why Screw Holes Will Be Bought and Used and Not Become Dead Stock for Anyone

1—They can be used without damage to receiving material.
2—They enable you to standardize to wood or machine screws in all material.
3—They are made of brass and will not rust under atmospheric or moisture conditions.
4—ECONOMY—They save more time value than the holes cost.
5—You get them for nothing and are paid for using them when you count time saved.
6—Screw holes have been needed ever since the first screw was used
7—Special tools are NOT needed in using them in any material.
8—They can be used in any place a screw can be used.
9—By using screw holes, screws can be used in many places, and in many materials where it is impossible to use screws without them.
10—These are the only ready-made screw holes in the world.
11—No special screws are needed. These screw holes fit any wood screw or machine screw now in stock.
12—They make the neatest possible job in any material.
13—Every store where screws are sold must carry them in stock, because the line of screws is not complete without screw holes for them.
14—Every shop and factory where screws are used must also have these screw holes to fit the screws.
15—They are endorsed by all dealers in screws and by all users of screws.
16—Screw holes are entirely new and the world supply is yet to be furnished.
17—This is a progressive Old World of ours, and every active person in it must adopt all improved methods, and all new articles that will help him keep in the front line of progress.
18—Be among the first to stock up in screw holes if you are a dealer in screws.
19—Be among the first to install screw holes in your shop or factory, as you begin to save money soon as you use them.
20—In spite of the high cost of brass, screw holes are yet cheap.
21—We are letting the world know that screw holes can now be secured, by means of extensive advertising in all the principal Trade Journals that have the largest circulation among dealers in screws as well as users of screws.
22—Do not let your customer ask you for screw holes before you have them in stock. BE A LIVE WIRE.
23—They make everlasting holes in any material.
24—They mean "Plug-No-More" screw holes.
25—They are the result of Necessity being The Mother of Invention.
26—Anyone who can drive a nail can use screw holes.
27—Send for a sample and convince yourself.
28—Mechanics who see them say, "What do you think of that?"
29—In fact there are NO REASONS why screw holes should NOT be used.

Each of these reasons are enough to sell Screw Holes. There are many other reasons.

Write at once for our handsome Color Card showing screw holes in various materials which will be sent on request, together with samples and price list.

Mr.....

My dear sir:

I want this message to be personal because if you have seen our advertisements right-along and have not acted upon them there must be something wrong with me---or with you.

Which is it? Have we asked you to send money? No! But we have offered to send you a valuable book, free.

And that book must prove that we save you money and trouble and worry ---or you don't do business with us.

Not much of a "hold-up," is it?

Then why be afraid? There's nothing to lose and a whole lot to gain.

Therefore, don't put it off again; but drop us a postal right-away, and tell us to send you the IMSCO Book.

Earnestly,

WHR*CR W. H. Rabell

So that you will know what to look for I will add that we are using a projector that permits us to stop and view the films as we would lantern slides. You will therefore see the difference between additive and substractive colors in pictures and not in words, for has not someone said "that a reel of pictures will tell more than 300 pages of printed matter and in a much shorter time." You will see the nature of the colored images when separated into single colors. The results of incorrect coloring. What registration means. The accuracy of the color rendering, for we have the pictures on the curtain and the fabrics that were photographed in our hands. A duplicate of the original negative will be seen, which shows the color values but which of itself is devoid of color.

This paper is mostly a description of a process followed by Prizma, Inc., and as it is the only process now in the hands of our associates, the projectionists, it seemed to me proper to give them these details.

It has been suggested that a paper be prepared covering the elementary principles of color lights and color photography as applied to cinematography to be in the very simplest of language, shorn of technical terms, or when necessary to use such terms that they be accompanied by illustrations. Mr. Max Mayer will collaborate in the preparation of the paper so that it will follow lines which he has contended should be followed by our society, his notion being that they should be for the good of the largest number that it is possible to interest rather than for the mutual edification of our limited membership. If the members concur we will proceed with the work.

Norton, Bird & Whitman Make Extensive Plans for Theatre Development

NORTON, BIRD & WHITMAN of 501 Fifth avenue, New York City, have been retained by certain important interests to design, construct and develop in Newark, N. J., a modern 3500 seat theatre with other features that will make the selected locality the amusement center of Newark. The firm has already acquired the site, and its Consulting Architect, Mr. W. Albert Swasey, is now busy in the preparation of the plans that will make this one of the leading theatres in the metropolitan area. The plot is at the corner of Broad and Rector streets, Newark, at the head of Broad street and Central avenue, the two leading thoroughfares of the city.

This announcement brings to light an important phase in the development of modern picture theatres. Norton, Bird & Whitman under the direction of the same interests are making investigations in some twelve or fifteen other eastern cities as to their availability for immediate construction of large theatres. The interests that have retained Norton, Bird & Whitman believe that the motion picture industry is a permanent, staple and attractive field for financial investment, and the chain theatres wisely located, built and operated, rank as a banking investment and security basis that should appeal to selected investors; first because the investment is in choice real estate, wisely developed; and second, that the return is beyond that of many of the other leading industries of the country. They believe, therefore, that the same fundamental steps can and should be taken that are the basis ordinarily of industrial development. This comprises a study of the city from the point of view of its permanent prosperity, the restricted area that is its center of business and amusement, the ideal available location for a theatre and desirable hotel, offices, stores or other developments that may be desirable or necessary in order to secure the ideal location, and the acquisition of the site, and the correct design of the entire improvement. In other words, being men accustomed to require exact investigations and reports, preliminary to a proposed investment, they believe that motion picture developments justify the same study by trained investigators, engineers and other experts that will insure the success of any particular selection.

The members of the firm have had extensive experience in investigations and reports upon industrial matters for bankers and investors, as well as in the actual design and construction of large enterprises. They have associated with them such men as Mr. W. Albert Swasey, as Consulting Architect. Mr. Swasey is one of the leading theatrical architects in the country, having designed and built some forty theatres throughout the country, in addition to extensive work in the design and construction of office buildings, hotels, apartment houses and residences. During the war he was engaged in important work for the Government, where his special services were of great value. The firm has as its real estate adviser, Mr. Joseph P. Day, the leading real estate auctioneer and agent in the country. In addition to handling great real estate auctions throughout the country, his office represents some of the leading corporations and operators, including several of the large chain stores in their acquisition of desirable sites throughout the country.

Mr. W. J. Norton, head of the firm, says:

"The motion picture industry is already one of the great industries in the country, and it is just beginning to further exceptional development. The producers are sparing no expense in the production of great and wonderful pictures. The public taste desires such pictures accompanied by the best music. For these reasons there is a necessity for the immediate construction of large theatres thoroughly adaptable for the presentation of the best pictures and music under ideal conditions. We are deeply interested in more and better theatres, and are anxious to aid in every way in securing them. We believe we can aid the real estate owner and exhibitor in securing such theatres. We believe we can aid the banker to see that a good motion picture is as sound a banking proposition as any industry in his city."

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Won't You Come Along," by Con Conrad, a melodious waltz with words. (Richmond Pub.)

2—"In Your Arms." This ballad-fox trot is predicted to become a sensation as has "Tell Me" and "Smiles." (Richmond Pub.)

3—"When the Preacher Makes You Mine." A new record breaking fox trot. (Waterson, Berlin & Snyder.)

4—"Fan San." A sensational Oriental fox trot. (Whitmore Pub. Co.)

5—"Pinning." A slow, dreamy, and haunting waltz. (The Waldorf Music Pub. Co.)

6—"Western Rodeo," by Minot. A western descriptive. (Belwin, Inc.)

7—"Budding Spring," by Eugene Platzman. A number of exceptional tonal beauty, adaptable for certain scenes in the film. (Belwin, Inc.)

8—"Carolina Sunshine." A melodious waltz. (Harry Von Tilzer.)

9—"Chinese Chop Sticks," a novelty hit, an Oriental patrol and fox trot. (Harry Von Tilzer.)

10—"Africana," by M. L. Lake. A characteristic dance. (Carl Fischer.)

11—"Broken Blossoms," by Robert Edgar Long. This composition is dedicated to D. W. Griffith, producer of "Broken Blossoms." Also used in conjunction with the film production. (T. B. Harms, & Francis, Day & Hunter.)

Five Fox Pictures Inspire As Many Songs

SO great has been the popularity of recent screen productions by William Fox, that the publishers of popular songs are setting these entertainments to music. Five Fox pictures have been thus harmonized.

Negotiations are said to be under way between the producer and representatives of several music publishers for five more songs, the words and music of which shall be based on releases by Fox Film Corporation.

Among the Fox productions already used for music is "Evangeline," the screen version of Henry W. Longfellow's poem, with Miriam Cooper as the star. This production was directed by R. A. Walsh. The words of the "Evangeline" song were written by Joseph McCarthy and the music was composed by Fred Fisher. McCarthy & Fisher, 224 West 46th Street, published the song.

The same firm has published a song that is already one of the most popular of the season. It is based on the screen version of Henry Blossom's famous play, "Checkers" which William Fox is presenting with Thomas Carrington, Jean Acker and all-star cast, under the direction of Richard Stanton. Leo Edwards and Edgar Allen are responsible for the words and music of "Checkers."

Why Are Music Selections So Often Duplicated?

THE music editor recently had the pleasure of being present at a showing of one of the latest Goldwyn pictures for the purpose of arranging a musical cue sheet. Howard Dietz, Director of Service, of Goldwyn Pictures Corp., was also present, and being interested in the general welfare of the exhibitor, and trying to give Goldwyn Exhibitors the best service possible, Mr. Dietz began to discuss the value of the Goldwyn music cues. Among other things mentioned, there is one question which I am prompted to answer in a public manner. My reason for doing so is due to the fact that such men as H. B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Mr. Hadley, of Hallmark Pictures, S. L. Rothapfel, the world known exhibitor, and many others, have asked me the same question. "Why do most music cues only suggest a certain variety of music," or "Why are music selections so often duplicated." The logical answer to the above question is as follows:

The music cue sheet of today is not designed for such institutions as Shea's Hippodrome, or any other theatre whose musical destinies are subject to weekly changes and guided by competent musical directors and managers. To my mind, a musical cue sheet of today should be nothing else but a musical continuity dividing the film into musical characters.

It is absolutely essential for the benefit of the majority using music cues who are not fortunate enough to be located near a music buying center, or cannot afford to buy too much music, to use a limited amount of musical selections. In fact, I have made it my business to use the same compositions on as many cues as possible, providing the film permits it. I have selected three hundred musical numbers, each one representing a certain character most likely to appear in the film, and have consistently used a composition entitled "Bleeding Hearts" for pathetic situations, thereby forcing musicians to buy it and get acquainted with its character and melody. The musician receiving a cue sheet with "Bleeding Hearts" as a certain cue knows what to do. He has played the composition, is thoroughly familiar with its character, and therefore knows what to substitute in its place. The main point of the above statement is based on the fact that by using new and unknown compositions on every cue sheet, would render it worthless to the musician who does not possess the numbers mentioned, and therefore could not substitute for lack of familiarity with their character. Every music cue is valueless unless it is compiled within the limits of the contents of most music libraries. As a matter of example, suppose the gentlemen who are compiling musical cue sheets at present, would try to employ "high brow" ideas by mentioning Symphonic Extracts or Operatic Extracts, standard classics, etc., instead of numbers generally known to 99 per cent. of the musicians. Of what value would such a music cue be? A musician or exhibitor who receives such a music cue one of two hours before the opening performance would absolutely be at a loss as to what to play. He would under no circumstances be able to appropriately use these musical suggestions because most of the numbers would be either unknown to him, or of such type which would render them impractical and unplayable for a small combination of instruments. In such a case most musicians would also be unable to substitute suitable compositions as the musical numbers suggested on the cue sheet would be strange in character and construction and so make it impossible for the musician to intelligently substitute with numbers which he already has in his library.

Film companies are at present spending a considerable amount of money for purposes which are supposed to help the Exhibitor towards perfecting the Exhibition of Motion pictures. Naturally everything devised for the above purpose is to serve the majority and not the minority. I believe that the high-brow music cue sheet is only of service to the minority in the strictest sense of the word. A practical music cue as suggested in the above paragraphs will without a question of a doubt serve the greater part of the Exhibitors. I admit that the most perfect thing is "something" which would be of service to everyone, but at the same time we all must admit that nothing can be devised to satisfy them all. Another important fact is the following:

Every music library is a true reflection on the musical knowledge of the musician who owns it. I suggest that all those gentlemen compiling high brow cue sheets, compare their ideas with the contents of most music libraries and they will find that they are suggesting things which are far above requirements of present day orchestras for the reason of:

The high-brow compositions, in the first place, necessitate a large orchestra and many rehearsals to attain perfection. The majority of motion picture orchestras, are of average size and they are receiving their films a very short time before the showing. If such a theatre would attempt to use high-brow stuff it would create an antagonistic atmosphere among its patrons. By this I mean, a musically inclined audience will seriously object to a faulty rendition of a good musical composition, and the average audience will be indifferent as to its presentation and will simply condemn the musical attraction, as being uninteresting and valueless.

I believe, that the gentlemen preparing the music cue sheets, as well as the musician, should bear one and only one important fact in mind. Compositions must be selected which are of such type that the musically inclined audience will accept it as "good enough" and the non-musically inclined audience will be able to understand and appreciate it. I have in the past several times commented on this subject but it seems that there are always some people who have not as yet realized the value of a neutral musical atmosphere and I therefore find it necessary to again write on the subject, and I will continue to do so until my ideas are definitely approved of, or definitely proved invaluable.—THE EDITOR.

Building Construction a Huge Gamble Except Under the Cost-Plus-Fixed-Fee Contract

Cooperation Among Owner, Architect and Builder Insured by New Form of Building Contract

By A. E. Wells, President Wells Brothers Construction Co., Chicago

IF a half-dozen street urchins are caught by a burly representative of the law while engaged in the pastime of shooting craps, the law against gambling acts. Law makers have recognized that gambling is an unnecessary evil and have, so far as possible, put a stop to it.

Yet an owner and a contractor can gamble with a million times the stake of the street urchins without fear of the law and it is done constantly under the guise of the lump-sum contract.

For under its terms the contractor agrees that for a certain sum of money he will guarantee the owner against all the unknown conditions involved in putting up a structure. Whether he makes his figured profit or whether he loses so heavily as to be put out of business rests partly on his ability to figure costs but largely on his luck in failing to meet those conditions which would increase costs.

Both parties to this contract stand to gain or lose. If the job costs 20 per cent. more than estimated the owner gains to the other's loss. If conditions make considerable saving possible, then the contractor gains to the owner's loss.

Many contractors who in times past have built extensively in your field are no longer operating. Others have taken their place. Perhaps the majority of the missing firms are those who were expected not only to build according to specifications and within the time limit but to gamble that their costs would fall within a fixed contract price. Gambling against variables such as the forces of nature and the conditions of labor—they lost. In many cases their failure involved an added investment on the part of the owner or possibly the surety company. It is certain that no one gained through the failure.

The contractor is an expert retained to assemble certain materials into a finished structure. The question being asked today is "should the contractor insure the owner that his structure will not exceed a definite contract price." In competitive bidding the cost of this insurance is paid generally by the low bidder out of profits or, as frequently happens, out of his capital, for the reason that he is more likely to get the contract as he scales down his allowance for contingencies. In fact the man whose bid includes a safe allowance for insurance against higher costs cannot expect to obtain work under the competitive bidding system. The inevitable result is the bankruptcy of many contractors and an additional cost to the owner or the surety company to complete the unfinished contract. This situation has come to such a point that surety companies are refusing to write surety bonds on fixed price contracts except under specially favorable conditions and frequently recommend to owners the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract.

But from the owner's standpoint is it not preferable to know in advance what a certain project will cost? It is true that a careful estimate is due him. It should be made by a reliable contractor and checked by owner's architect and engineer. Such a figure should be more satisfactory than a competitive bid which does not necessarily show the cost of the building, but only what some contractor is willing to gamble is the cost of the job.

At the Chicago meeting of the Associated General Contractors of America, November 21, 1918, this topic was discussed and Brigadier-General R. C. Marshall, Jr., chief of the construction division of the U. S. War Department, pointed out the fault of the usual pre-war basis of contract.

General Marshall said that early in the spring of 1918, the program of work before the construction division was so extensive that it seemed advisable to have the merits of this form of contract again passed upon and a committee of eminent business men unqualifiedly endorsed this form of contract. In General Marsall's own words at the convention of general contractors:

"No contractor should be called upon nor permitted to undertake the performance of any contract that within the four corners of the paper upon which it appears is, or may be written the financial bankruptcy of the contractor. It is unjust, it is inequitable, it is uneconomic. The great lesson of this war on the subject of the relationship between the contractor and the owner is the cost-plus contract. This represents the only equitable basis under which a contractor may perform constructive and economic services for the owner. It is the only form of contract which affords protection to both parties."

We have been operating under this plan almost exclusively for several years. We know that it is possible to convince most business men of the perfect fairness of the cost-plus contract and among our clients are several who would be the last to tie themselves up with us on any basis of contract likely to be unfair or dangerous.

Money tied up during construction earns nothing until the building is ready for occupancy and the interest often amounts to a considerable sum. When we have opportunity to work with the owner, architect and engineer from the very inception of plans and when we begin foundations as soon as the general contour of the building and equipment are determined upon, we are able materially to cut down the period during which the owner's capital is unproductive. Under the lump-sum contract it is necessary that the plans be complete before bids are taken which may delay occupancy for months and without occupancy a building investment is poor as a dividend producer.

But while speed is of first importance in most building contracts, yet fairness to both parties is an equally good reason for its general adoption and on that basis our company is now operating almost exclusively. We feel that the owner should reap any benefit we are able to bring about. To give us incentive to make such savings we ask a moderate percentage of that saving under the estimated cost. Our standard contract calls for a return to the owner of 90 per cent. of such savings all of which would have accrued wholly to the contractor under the lump-sum plan. We believe 10 per cent. of the savings to be an adequate incentive for the contractor. We have almost invariably made savings for the owner below the estimated cost on our cost-plus contracts and such savings have not been through the padding of preliminary estimates but through changes or economics in construction made with the consent of owner, architect and engineer, which produced either a structure more adaptable to its purpose or of lower cost with equal value. Such changes could be made only with difficulty under the lump-sum contract as the average owner is averse to changing original specifications because of the generally high cost of "extras" or divergence from the original basis of bidding.

The cost-plus-fixed-fee basis has been adopted for the major manufacturing and merchandising operations. Automobile makers do not gamble with a fixed price but from season to season vary their selling prices according as costs rise or fall. There is less of general price advertising than before the war and now many standard articles of commerce, once fixed as to price like the Ingersoll Dollar Watch, are today on a new basis and tomorrow may be higher or lower according as costs dictate.

Unquestionably the contractor is called in because he is an expert in building and not to absorb the risk entailed in the lump-sum contract. If it is not the purpose of the owner to buy price insurance along with his building then cost-plus-fixed-fee is a better basis.

My Views on the Lobby

By S. J. Newman

Secretary and Treasurer of the Newman Mfg. Co.

I have been requested by the editor of this publication to contribute a series of articles dwelling upon the "heart" of every theatre, "The Lobby." Before I commence, I must ask Mr. Reader to refrain from criticizing too harshly my ability as a writer, for I'll admit before I'm accused that I never was cut for one. However, I will, to the best of my ability, endeavor to show you the value of your lobgby, and I believe that before I have concluded my last article I will have converted a great many exhibitors to my way of thinking, and as a result many will profit thereby. Of course, I do not expect my views to coincide with those of all my readers, but I'll come mighty close to it.

There is no questioning the fact that the lobby is

Gentlemen:-

The agreement between your company and ourselves, for the distribution of AUTOMATICKET SYSTEMS, throughout the world, includes a clause which permits us to double our quota upon written notice to you. Please accept this letter as such notice---to take effect immediately.

You will probably be as much surprised as we were at the instantaneous success with which these SYSTEMS met throughout practically all parts of the world. In fact, the demand for machines has been so great that we believe even the doubling of our quota will not enable us to meet the full requirements of the many exhibitors and dealers who have placed and are now sending us orders for machines.

We anticipate a deluge of orders when the SYSTEMS now in use have proven their capabilities—as they undoubtedly will. Please inform us as to when your factory's facilities will be such that we may triple our quota.

Very truly yours,

a vital asset to every theatre. Show me a fine lobby display and nine out of ten times I'll show you a theatre taking in the coin and showing to packed houses. Show me a poor lobby display, and it's a ten-to-one shot that I can show you a struggling exhibitor who is fighting against odds to keep his pocketbook from appearing like a steam roller had done its worst. It is the latter class of exhibitors to whom I am directing this article. I know that by perseverance I'll succeed in arousing some of them. Mayhap some of them may feel like the Irishman did in a little story I heard, something like this: An English clergyman turned to a Scotchman and asked him, "What would you be were you not a Scot," The Scotchman replied, "Why, an Englishman, of course." The clergyman turned to the gentleman from Ireland and asked him, "And what would you be were you not an Irishman?" The man thought for a moment, and said, "I'd be ashamed of meself!"

Getting back to the subject again, it is essential for every theatre to make an attractive lobby display, the same as a shoe store must make an attractive window display. How long would it be before a store proprietor would have to hang up the much-dreaded sign, "Closed by order of the Court," if he did not continue to make neat and attractive window displays? Not very long! So it is with the theatre. The lobby should be decorated as frequently as necessary, and, above all things, the posters and photos should be neatly and attractively shown in beautiful display cabinets. Displaying posters of coming programs is very necessary, as it keeps up the interest of the patrons and causes many of them to await with expectancy the picture plays coming.

It is an advantage to have the display of posters and photos as close as possible to the public's eye. It must be neatly and compactly placed so as to command immediate notice. The accompanying illustrations show the very last Unit Display Cabinets which are ideal in these respects just mentioned.

These Cabinets are provided with hinged glass doors and a kick board properly shaped to fit any slope of the lobby. A gold leaf glass sign above the three sheet compartments with the name of the theatre is a part of the equipment. Quite often the backs are covered with velour so that 11 x 14, 8 x 10 and 22 x 28 photographs mounted in small frames, can be artistically displayed.

The attractive brass ticket booth placed, as it is near the sidewalk close to the public is a clever means of selling many extra tickets. It is designed for winter and summer use. Hinged photo or poster compartments along the lower sides of booth makes it a practical displayer in addition to being a splendid box office. The electric lighted cornice at top brilliantly lights up the booth at night with good effect. The booth is furnished complete with glass, etc., ready to be placed in immediate use.

The investment in these display cabinets is comparatively insignificant, and it will pay back the principal in a very short time. Throw away the cheap wooden frames. Do not pas.e posters against the wall or suspend them in a row in front over the entrance.

Do not hesitate in making your lobby attractive—displaying your posters and photos effectively in frames—and I'll venture to say that the exhibitor who follows this advise (even though it might take his last dollar) will say that it is the best investment he ever made.

Increased Profits by Means of the Application of Floodlighting to the Theatre Front

By W. Earle Pashley

An Artist Showing How the Attractiveness and Pulling Power of the Front May Be Increased

FLOODLIGHTING of motion picture theatres is rapidly coming into prominence. The theatre owner is fast realizing that floodlighting is the most profitable advertising medium he can use to place his theatre before the public—the people are commencing to look for the theatre that is brilliantly lighted—the theatre that is lighted from tip to toe—the theatre that is floodlighted.

The first large application of floodlighting was for the production of spectacular and decorative effects. These were soon followed by its use for advertising purposes in the lighting of public buildings, signs, billboards and amusement parks.

This new lighting method, which, only a short time ago, was considered more or less of a novelty and a luxury, has taken on a permanent character and has become a necessity.

Outline lighting has been one of the most popular methods of lighting a building at night. This scheme was used for a great many years and many pleasing results have been secured. It remained for floodlighting, however, to produce the DAYLIGHT EFFECT.

Outline lighting is satisfactory in some cases. It does not, however, accentuate the architectural features of the building but rather obliterates details of design. In some instances the most effective results are obtained, by combining outline lighting with floodlighting.

Of all the various applications for floodlighting (and there are dozens) of all the different kinds of buildings that may be profitably floodlighted—the moving picture theatre offers the opportunity for the most profitable advertising of any.

The picture loving public looks for the brightly lighted theatre when they wish to see motion pictures. They look for the theatre that is attractive—not the dark, gloomy, show house.

Take yourself for instance—if you saw two moving picture theatres, one a block to the right of you, the other a block to the left of you—one brightly lighted from top to bottom, the other with barely enough illumination for the patrons to see their way—which would you choose? The answer is inevitable, the brilliantly lighted theatre, of course.

The California Theatre of Los Angeles, is an excellent example of successful floodlighting. Notice how the entire building is bathed in light.

The California Theatre is floodlighted with projectors manufactured by the National X-Ray Reflector Company of Chicago. These projectors are placed across the street on roofs of buildings and focused so as to evenly flood the entire surface of the California Theatre. Projectors are placed about 100 feet away and are concealed from view of persons on the adjacent side walk.

Another big X-Ray floodlighting installation is the huge new State-Lake Theatre at Chicago, Illinois. That the crowd follows the lights is well proven in this case. The bright appearance seems to beckon the multitude and they need no second invitation.

The effect is one of beauty, the result—more money in the box office.

More and more theatre owners are recognizing the psychology of having their theatres floodlighted not only because it reveals the architectural beauties upon which they spent large sums, but because they know it has a definite drawing power they cannot otherwise obtain.

How a Reflector Works

With floodlighting, the illumination is thrown upon the lighted object from a distance. This requires the use of a projector employing powerful reflectors of special design.

The floodlighting projector is not designed to throw a concentrated beam such as is obtained with a searchlight or locomotive headlight, but rather to spread the light evenly over a comparatively large area.

A suitable unit if located 50 feet from the ground and directed at an angle of about 30 degrees below the horizontal, will cover an area on the ground about 40 feet in width and 80 feet long.

An X-Ray projector throws a beam of light that is conical. When it strikes a surface perpendicularly it illuminates a circular area.

When the beam is directed to the surface at an angle, however, it illuminates an area that is oval in shape.

If the beam is directed perpendicularly to the

BEFORE and AFTER

The accompanying illustrations show Mr. Van Borsum's Crescent Theatre, Terre Haute, Before and After installing NEWMAN'S UNIT DISPLAY CABINETS, also brass ticket booth. The results were so startling at the box office that Mr. Van Borsum's Savoy Theatre was fitted promptly with our Unit Display Cabinets.

NEWMAN'S POSTER and PHOTO DISPLAY CABINETS will lend distinction to your theatre by their neatness and beauty. The discriminating and successful theatre owners are installing Newman's Unit Display Cabinets because they are attractive, simple, serviceable and compact.

In this era of keen competition and costly programs the critical public demands an attractive and inviting lobby display; one which at a glance will show the day's attractions effectively.

Many high class pictures have proven failures at the box office because they were not properly displayed to the public.

Newman's Cabinets are furnished with hinged doors made of corrugated brass moulding complete with glass and locks. A kick board is provided properly shaped to fit slope of lobby. These cabinets are fastened permanently to the theatre front, and it is only necessary to open the glass doors when inserting new paper. They are also made to fit any special requirement and with any desired number of poster or photo compartments, and in any finish which does not require polishing such as lacquered brass, lemon bronze, statuary bronze, old copper, nickel silver, verdi green, brass or copper oxidized.

We have furnished these Unit Display Cabinets in many theatres throughout the country. We are the originators of the Unit Display Cabinets. Send for our new catalogue showing some of the very latest frames, in metal or wood, easels, railings, ticket booths, ticket choppers, etc.

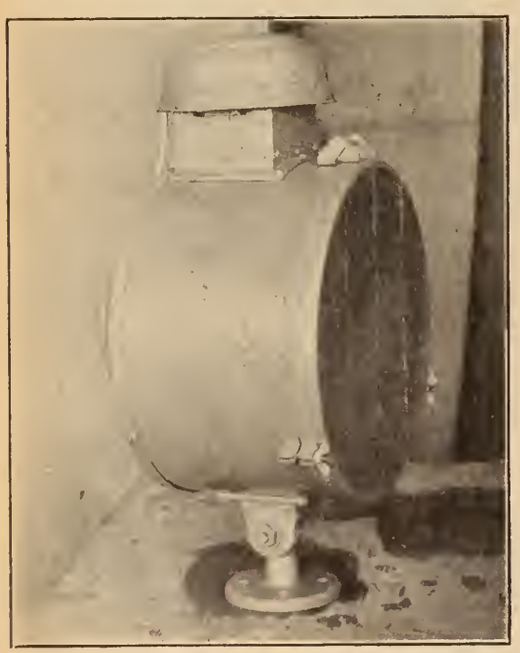
surface to be lighted, the field is illuminated with a practically uniform intensity but when the beam strikes the surface at an angle, the portions of the field nearest the projector are brightest and the remote portions less bright.

Necessary Features of Projectors

Projector units are now obtainable for use with lamps from 200 Watts up to 1,500 Watts. These units are used almost entirely out of doors and accordingly should have special features. They should be:



1. Well ventilated.
2. Weather-proofed in such a manner that the lamp and reflector will not be affected by changes in atmospheric conditions.
3. Compact.
4. Light in weight.
5. Easily installed.
6. Readily accessible for cleaning and renewing of lamps.
7. Capable of adjustment for different spreads of the beam light.
8. Easily adjusted for pointing the beam in any horizontal or vertical direction.
9. Of correct design.
10. Of the highest efficiency and the reflecting surface should be of a permanent nature.

There are several companies manufacturing floodlighting projectors and the necessary accompanying equipment. National X-Ray Reflector Company of Chicago makes the most complete line, however, and it conforms entirely to the foregoing ten features. Accordingly, the writer will tell in detail about their floodlighting products.

Lamps for Floodlighting

A special floodlighting lamp has been recently perfected for this service by the lamp manufacturers. It is a concentrated filament, gas-filled, Mazda lamp of great light giving capacity, made in 250 and 500 Watt sizes.

The regular Mazda "C" lamps used for flood lighting are the same as those for standard lighting service and come in sizes from 300 Watts to 1,000 Watts.

One type of projector used for floodlighting

X-Ray Projectors

X-Ray projectors for floodlighting consist of three distinct series—the 50, 60 and 90 series.

The No. 50 series uses a 200 or 250 Watt round bulb floodlighting lamp. These projectors are small, compact and portable.

The No. 60 series is designed for the 400 and 500 Watt floodlighting lamp, and has the advantages of great flexibility both in the matter of adjusting the lamp, and in the interchangeability of reflectors. An extremely wide range of light distribution is possible with this series.

Another projector for theatre floodlighting

The No. 90 or "Mogul" series is made for use with standard lamps from 300 Watts up to 1,100 Watts. The units are adjustable both for focusing and pointing of the beam.

Reflectors

The X-Ray reflector is the most powerful reflector made. It is a powerful agent for proper light control, which takes the light of the brilliant lamp and redirects in a well defined field.

The reflector is made of tough blown glass. Each reflector is of one piece and can be fashioned into almost any shape—according to requirements.

The reflecting surface is pure silver and is protected by a special green backing which positively prevents cracking, peeling or blistering.

An unusually high efficiency and an excellent control of light is made possible because of the silver mirrored reflecting surface.

Many reflectors are made of metal. This naturally requires cleaning and a great deal of polishing which presents a serious problem.

Projectors with metal reflectors placed in inaccessible places are very difficult to keep in a highly efficient condition.

The X-Ray reflector being made of glass can be cleaned by merely wiping it off with a damp cloth. It is not necessary to remove the reflector from the projector. Thus the X-Ray unit permits quick and easy cleaning.

The Theatre Front

THE motion picture theatre attracts two classes of people, first those who leave their homes without any intention of seeing a picture show, but, by seeing posters or photographs displayed attractively are drawn to it, and are willing to give the necessary time to study its characters, its thrilling scenes, and heroic passages. From time immemorial, pictures and attractive framing have been closely related. Many of the old masters went to the extent of modeling their own frames in which to display their masterpieces, for they, above anybody else were capable of appreciating the enhancing effect a frame has on a picture. It it a common practice for well-known artists today to supervize the framing of their pictures, knowing only too well that a picture poorly displayed does not look as well, sell so readily nor does it fetch the price that its more fortunate companion will bring, due only to the more tasteful selection of the frame.

The second class are the people who leave their homes with the intention of seeing a picture show, but are undecided where to go. When one theatre looks rich, dignified and bright, and the other is just a step in advance of the proverbial Wild West Tent, everything in the way of entertainment being equal, there is no question that they will prefer to go to the place which looks like a "real theatre" and not merely a "movie." They will judge the entertainment offered by the manner in which it is presented.

Improvement of the Front

TO improve the front, the first essential is a coat of paint, of course. The next step is the installation of attractive wall cases, as they are now gotten up by the leading manufacturers of lobby frames. There is nothing that the mason or decorator can do, that will show such a decided improvement for a limited expenditure as a tastefully designed set of wall cases as they are now made. With their rich velour backgrounds and various combinations, into corner cases of sectional one-sheet frames, etc., they how off the attraction to the best advantage. They can be placed above the entrance making a pleasing Arch effect, and provide an excellent place for showing a complete week's program (2 kinds).

The next place to use to good advantage for advertising purposes, and at the same time to make a decorative and pleasing effect is the vestibule. It is a curious fact that while the average person will not mind loitering in the vestibule and looking over every poster and photo to his hearts' content, without in any way feeling that he is tresspassing, or intruding, he will hesitate a good deal, before he will step into the lobby behind the doors. He somehow feels that he has committed himself, to pay admission and "see the show."

It is a surprise that so few of the exhibitors utilize their lobby for advertising purposes. It has been found that the average architect or decorator will concern himself purely with the artistic side of the building, too often overlooking the fact that the function of a moving picture theatre is to show pictures, and their best means of publicity is their lobby, where they have a 100 per cent amusement-seeking people, continually passing in and out.

A very effectice way of holding the public attention has been found by combining mirrors and photo cases or oil paintings of stars with photo cases or one-sheets so that when the ladies stop at the mirror (and who of them do not) they can not help but see the coming attraction advertised. By providing seats along the wall the waiting audience will be held in a more restful and contented state of mind and will not mind the necessity of coming early for a seat, and their appreciation of the management's thoughtfulness will add to the popularity of the house.

A new and very novel place for advertising coming attractions has been discovered by a leading manufacturer of Lobby Frames and that is the back wall of the theatre. Concealed electrically illuminated one-sheet wall cases are installed, the light is subdued and concealed in a very handsome flower box overhung with trailers and other floral effects. This is an extremely pretty piece which holds the attention of the out-going patron of the time he is in the aisle. It is the one lighted spot he sees in the darkened auditorium.

Economy

THE economical side of the use of Wall Cases has not yet been discovered by a good many exhibitors. The exhibitor should realize that by installing a tasteful layout of photo cases, portraits and mirrors, he can entirely do away with the services of the Fresco Painter, decorator, and marble man, by simply giving the lobby one or two coats of buff, cream or gray. The frames and wall cases will break up the montony of the wall and act as panels and decorations that will stand comparison with some of the best decorated theatres in the country at only a fraction of their cost.

In conclusion, we cannot too strongly emphasize upon the exhibitor that fact that his front and his lobby are his show windows and to successfully utilize them, he must follow the lead of merchants, who are spending fabulous sums for window trimming and professional window trimmers. Marshall Field Company estimate the windows of their Chicago retail stores at from $50.00 to $75.00 per day per window. Department stores in smaller cities credit their windows as advertising mediums with a value of from $10.00 to $25.00 per day. No store has the attraction for the passing of transient crowd that a motion picture theatre has, so that the smallest theatre with an attractive front and lobby has a distinct advantage over his merchant neighbors. To neglect this advertising opportunities of his house front and lobby is a reflection on the showmanship and business ability of any exhibitor.

The Development of the Poster

By Daniel Petigor

Vice-Pres. of the Richey Litho. Corp., and Founder of the Posters Artists' Assn. of America

POSTER advertising is almost as old as the human race—probably the first one made was hung on an apple tree in the Garden of Eden, and bore the words "Forbidden fruit!" Judging by results its message failed to get over.

However, that is very ancient history, and our present concern is with the modern motion picture poster—a subject fraught with interest for everybody connected with photoplay production, for no other phase of advertising exploitation is so essential to a picture's financial success.

The first moving picture posters were obviously inspired by the old fashioned circus posters, and they were handled in much the same manner—they were striking and lurid, and had a color scheme consisting of about twenty-eight different shades of red. Nevertheless in their day and time they served their purpose—certainly they got results, for the motion picture had an immediate audience. For that, the poster was largely responsible, as it was the direct link between the exhibitor and the public. The shrewd showman recognized in every casual passerby a potential ticket taker, and therefore placed his posters as nearly as possible in the direct line of their vision.

As the audiences grew in size, the poster developed in quality, and a definite demand, an insistent demand, was made for better, and ever better paper. The pictures themselves were largely responsible for this, for in their very nature they were furnishing the public with an artistic education previously lacking. The exhibitors, also, recognizing the fact that their box office results depended primarily upon the posters, added their voice to the voice of the general public.

A perfect poster was wanted. Such a poster as would call the passerby's attention to itself—that would tell him something about the picture advertised in terms that would arose his curiosity. It would have to do even more than that, for to be absolutely successful it must literally force him to buy a ticket! In other words a perfect poster must be striking. It must be appealing. It must be convincing and above all else it must be impelling!

It follows that the making of such a poster is no very simple matter. It is not that the mechanical appliances and equipment of the lithographing plant are prohibitively expensive.

The big factor is—Brains!

To properly conceive the perfect poster requires a person who has a natural instinct for crowd psychology—an intellectual quality that surprisingly few people have. It consists largely of the sure ability to know exactly what subject matter will make a universal appeal; an ability to strip away the non-essentials—to lay bare the very essence of a dramatic situation, and still leave the beholder in a state of suspended curiosity. He must also have the ability to impart his thought to the artist who will render the idea into a practical working poster design.

Which is a difficult thing to do; for it must not only be done in terms that "the man on the street" will readily understand—of necessity it must be rendered in a strong, vigorous, decisive manner, in an arresting manner—in a poster manner! Yet, it may not be done crudely, for the public in mass are not ignorant and lacking in refinement. A very large proportion would resent, and be repelled by crude or gross artistry. These things cannot be done by an ordinary artist, no matter how talented he may be. It is obvious that in addition to the painter's technique the qualifications of a trained advertising man are needed—an exceedingly rare combination. A poster has to get its message over in the fraction of a second, and while there are many great artists, thre are mighty few who have the knack of doing that. From these few the poster artists are chosen, but even among the poster artists not many are capable of designing really great moving picture posters; for another limitation is imposed. It is the absolute necessity for accurate poster portraiture, one of the most difficult things an artist can attempt!

In the matter of portraits, experience is an important factor, as the repeated drawing of the same star's features gives the artist an ever increasing ability to portray them truly. There are men in our employ who know the faces of these same stars better than the actors' own parents do. From memory alone they can depict an exact likeness of any notable screen actor, so great is their experience and facility.

Transferring the designs to the stones and printing are the last phases of the posters' execution. Here again highly trained men with long experience in motion picture work are necessary, for the best sketches can be spoilt through poor lithographic execution.

However, enough has been said to prove the original contention. The one big thing required to make a perfect poster is—BRAINS!

Decoration of the Theatre as Vital to Its Success As the Quality of Pictures Exhibited

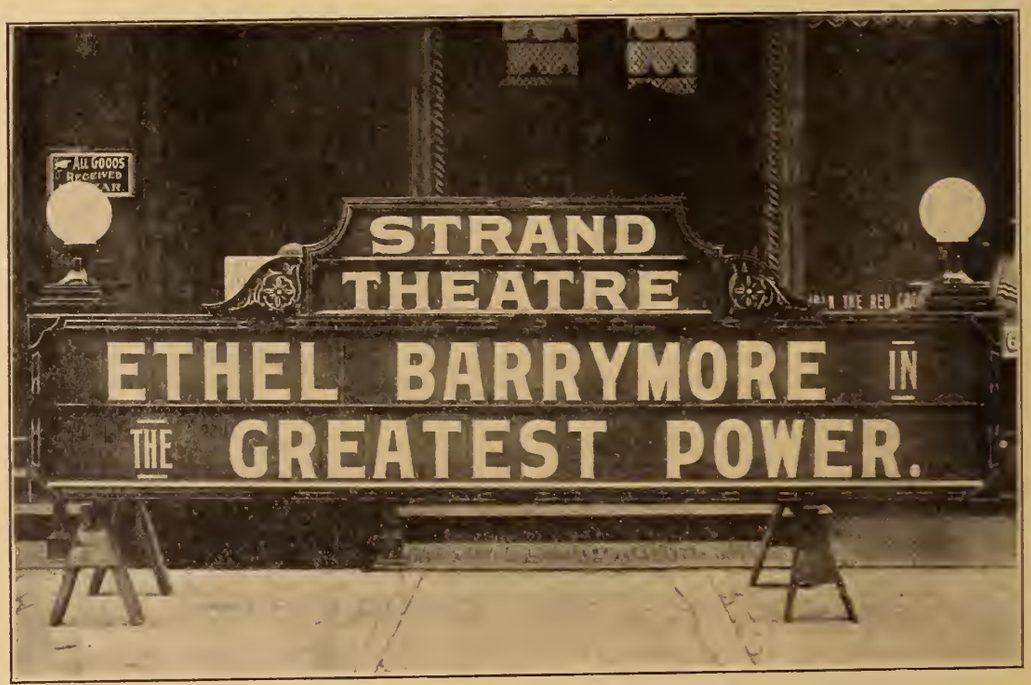
An Expert in Color Discusses Effects of Decorative Features Employed in Lobby and Auditorium

By N. M. Collart, Supt. of Decorative Department, Sherwin Williams Co.

THE past few years have seen a most remarkable change in the status of the theatre. The most potent factor in bringing about this change has been the development of the moving picture. Everyone remembers when it was "movies" and the "legitimate" theatre.

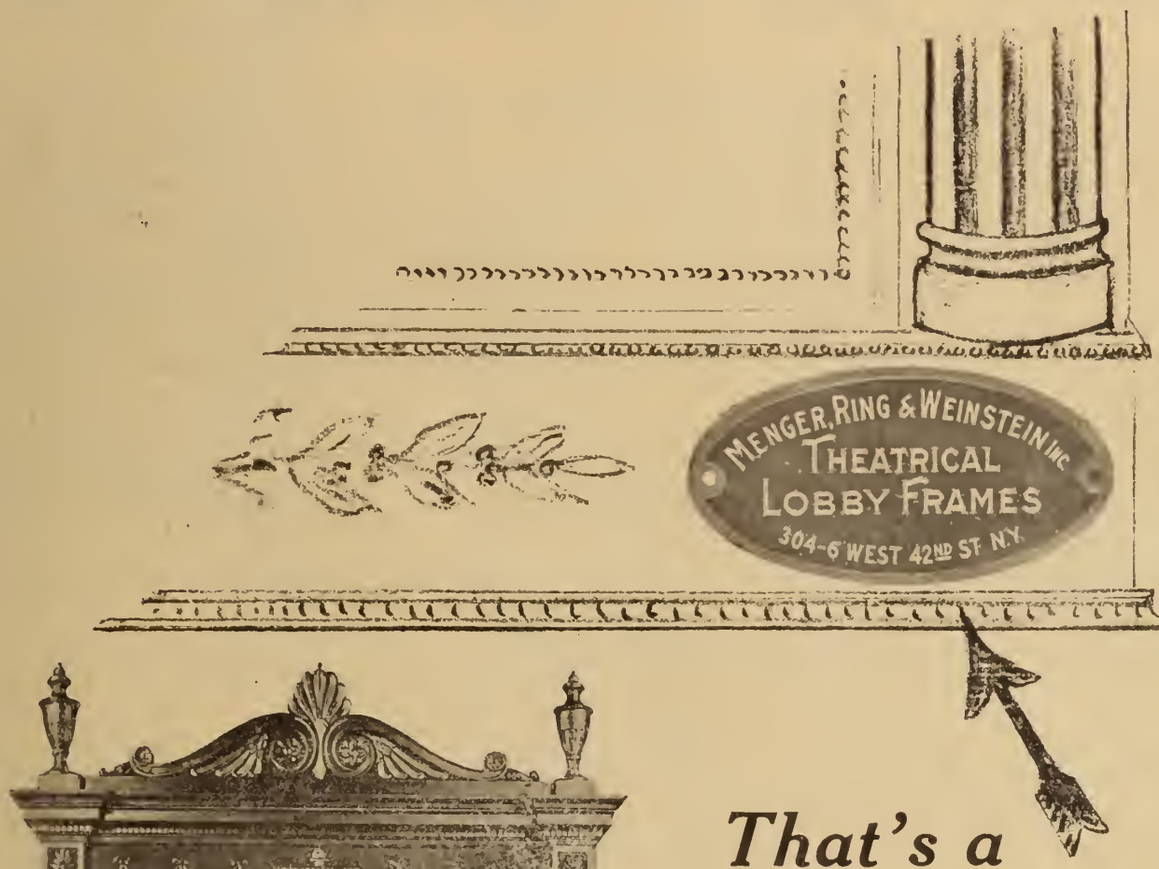
While immense sums of money have been spent in producing spectacular films for years back, the industry itself had not the confidence in its own future to provide show houses which would compare with our "regular" theatres.

In fact when a picture was pretentious enough to warrant a real showing, a screen was provided in the "opera" house. This condition has now passed and every town in the country boasts of its "movie palace," a theatre built for pictures exclusively, generally without even the pretense of a stage. A trip through any of our large cities will show that not only are the downtown sections crowded with picture theatres, but every community center as well has its own play house.



Thus an insatiable appetite for entertainment has been aroused and the building of new theatres to meet this demand is being crowded to the limit. The keenest competition is therefore created. The movie patron now knows from experience, that he can se any picture he wants, some time, not only at the big downtown theatre, but in his own neighborhood, or some other easily accessible theatre. You see now what I am leading to—this person, if he is discriminating (who will admit he isn't?) will see that picture where it is put on best.

This means, of course, where the music is best, etc., but it also means where the patron is most comfortable and where his eye can feast upon the beautiful in decoration as well as the picture.



Competition has been beneficial here as elsewhere and a very considerable portion of the cost of a new theatre covers the decorating, for which the best architects and decorative experts are consulted. This is only as it should be, for we are coming to know, more and more, the effect color has upon our very living itself.

The patron's first and last impression of the theatre is his impression of the lobby and also the foyer—frequently the two are combined. Speaking in general terms, the lobby should attract; while, certainly, the color scheme must not be garish or cheap, the colors used may be more aggressive and striking. More strength and character of design may be used here and pleasing contrasting woodwork and wall color displayed effectively. Period architecture and furniture may be employed in the lobby as they lend character and individuality and serve to identify the entrance of the theatre. Such a lobby invites you in to view more objects of beauty inside.

The decorative plan for the foyer should be one of ultra refinement. Wall color of soft warm grays with a color note of rose or heliotrope in drape and upholstery make the eye search for the pleasing detail found in cornice, mould, border design of hand painted stencil. A miniature fountain modestly playing in a sheltered nook is the center of interest in one theatre visited recently. One cannot always say off hand that this or that added would complete the scheme—or that the same omitted would remedy the situation. The entire subject is one meriting the most painstaking care in working out. Do not make the foyer appear like a curiosity shop, but also do not give it the forlorn look of the flat with the tenant moved out. Pleasing and appropriate lighting fixtures are better here than indirect or concealed lights.

The plan for the auditorium varies with the use to which it is put. Many theatres have a varied program where special musical numbers are featured. The screen retires behind rich, heavy folds of velvet curtains and there are unique lighting effects which show the stage to be an Italian Garden with pure classic columns through which one gets entrancing vistas of the distant landscape. Many styles and schools of architecture are resorted to in making "this" theatre more attractive than "that" one, for the point I wish to make is this: where the theatre is kept in permanently subdued light, the wall colors must be neutral, soft, and rather light-absorbing, dark colors are not necessary. A competent decorator can tell almost to a per cent, the amount of light absorbed by the tints he employs.

Where the auditorium is lighted frequently during the program, the mere lighting causes the eyes to wander about the room both as a relaxation from concentrated attention on the screen and from natural interest in seeing the house decorations. Here it is evident that beauty of form and color—whether it be low relief work, panels, molding or other architectural construction, the effect must be interesting and satisfying. The net result must not be distracting, for the attention must easily drift back to the logical center of interest, the front of the house. As in the foyer, there must be just enough, not too much.

As a closing thought, I would have you ask yourself these questions:

Do people linger in my theatre to admire the furnishings of lobby, foyer or lounging rooms?

Do I overhear my patrons discussing the beauties of the decorations or is their only topic of conversation, the picture they've just seen?

Do my patrons like to meet their friends in my lobby?

Is my theatre just a place to shoot pictures, or is it an institution with beautiful rooms and courteous service, which induces folks to say, "This is where we always go to see the pictures we like, and spend a pleasant evening, because everything is so agreeable here?"

One method of treating a difficult lobby entrance

Don't Forget Ticket Booth Equipment

NEGLECTING for the time being the electric signs that call attention to the theatre, the ticket booth is the patron's first contact with the theatre and its management. Here with money in hand he gets his first impression of the play-house. Whether this impression is favorable or otherwise has a great deal to do with that patron's further patronage of that particular theatre. And the appearance of booth and quality of equipment are the main determining characteristics.

In a story of this nature it is usual to go back in history before the subject being discussed had begun its rapid development. The rise of the motion picture has been so rapid that one needs to travel back but a few short years to come into touch with the very start of things.

At that time, there was no thought of tickets. The owner of the house was the manager, the money-taker, the anouncer, in fact, pretty nearly everything but the projection machine operator. The patron passed over the required fare and entered the portals. At the end of the day, the manager counted up his money, and from its bulk decided whether it "had been a good or a bad day." He had no definite knowledge of the number of patrons nor how they divided as to adults and children. Moreover, and what is even of greater importance, if the manager was forced through a preponderence of other duties to engage a money-taker, he was still more at a loss as to his finances. There was no system in those days by which the manager could check up those employes of his who handled the money. He merely hoped that they wouldn't take too much of it.

Such a method of doing business was entirely wrong. As competition grew and more money was laid out in theatres, their equipment, and the films for its entertainment, it became increasingly necessary to have some means of auditing the receipts of the box-office. Out of this demand were developed the present ticket vending and coin-changing machines.

The ticket vending machine has been with us for a considerable time already and has amply proved its worth. No house whatever the size has a right to be without one. By its use the ticket is issued in a businesslike manner, directly in front of the patron. There is no necessity for him to reach across a counter for an elusive piece of pasteboard. He states his wants and, genii-like the ticket or tickets appear before him.

From the owners financial standpoint their use is even more a requirement. The better machines have a means whereby the recording mechanism can be locked securely, proof against all meddling by attendants. If the tickets are numbered, and they should be, the manager is able at the end of the day to reckon the number and value of tickets sold. His computations should agree with the day's receipts as turned in by the cashier.

A comparative newcomer to the list of ticket-booth equipment is the coin changing machine. It had already come into wide application at soda fountains where the traffic of patrons was such as to cause a delay at the cashier's desk due to change-making. The theatre field has been but lately entered but here too, the changer seems to have made many friends. It is natural that it should do so for it works hand in hand with the ticket-vender. One of the few disadvantages of the ticket booth with the vending machine was the action of the cashier in laying the change on the flat counter. The attempt on the patron's part to pick up the coins one by one entailed a delay in the line waiting for tickets. All this is done away with by the coin changer. The money for the tickets is passed to the cashier who issues the tickets from the vending machine and then presses the levers of the coin changer. Immediately, the correct change is released from the latter device and slides by means of a trough to a small pocket directly in front of the patron. Even though the man or woman is wearing gloves it is a simple matter to take the change from the cup and make way for the people behind. There are other devices which are found in the booths of the larger theatres but these are not so necessary or satisfactory.

System in the Box Office

EFFICIENCY is the keystone which supports every business enterprise. Management principles are the guides for an industry. Both efficiency and management principles should be the common practice of all persons interested in conducting their enterprises in a business-like way. At this period of the world's history, with labor scarcities in practically every country of the world, new systems of operation must be devised that will either save time or save labor. The wastage of human efforts should be minimized.

When executives and highly salaried men devote their time to petty tasks, how can their organization be operated efficiently? This applies particularly to theatrical enterprises.

How often do you see a theatre owner standing within sight of his box office, eagle eye upon the cashier and doorman—intent upon discovering any collusion between his employees, but oftentimes causing the honest employe to feel the burden of his unwarranted suspicion. The manager might be devoting such time and efforts toward the improvement of his entertainment and the conditions of his theatre. The employees might be working with less friction and better results. Such a theatre owner is only a theatre owner—he is not a business man. His imagination is stagnant and his business does not progress. He will probably continue a theatre owner all his life—while the man who capitalizes new improvements and cashes in on the results acquires a chain of theatres.

If you were a large plantation owner the first thing you would do as a quick minded business manager would be to provide a system of good roads to bring your product to market. By the same token if you are a clever theatrical manager you will "smooth" the roads leading to your theatre entrance—and bring your market to you. Don't waste money, time, energy, or sacrifice efficiency by the use of antique and obsolete methods. Invest in modern equipment which in a short time will more than pay for itself. If the large theatre owners can't afford to operate without a speedy and trustworthy ticket system—then the small man surely requires such a system. It insures you of receiving every penny of revenue taken in by your cashier. It offers superior service day in and day out. Install a SYSTEM!

J. S. BERNSTEIN.

Signs of the Times

IF a theatre manager somewhere would be kind enough to make a test of the drawing power of his theatre with and without electric signs in operation, manufacturers of such signs would have available almost priceless arguments for their use. Just as if the up-to-date exhibitor has lost faith in electric signs. But many of the smaller houses, it is certain, have bought signs so as not to be overshadowed by his neighbor competitor.

Since there is not to be found a Manager who is willing to sacrifice himself as suggested above, the best argument for the use of signs is the pointing out of theatres where they have been installed and where the revenue has been satisfactory.

The public is much more apt to enter a theatre and 'take a chance' on liking the picture than to 'take an equal chance' with a theatre if the outside of the house is uninviting. An electric sign is the equivalent of a high-priced, convincing salesman or rather a corps of salesmen standing always at the door beckoning to passersby in friendly and elusive gestures.

Besides the large sign in front, calling out the theatre's name, there is usually the smaller interchangeable signs on which are carried the name of the star and that of the picture. Interchangeable signs now being manufactured are far in advance of those in general view some few years ago. No longer is it necessary to work from behind the lobby front, changing connections to lamp sockets. All changing is done from the front, easily and quickly and the result is an exceedingly neat and attractive announcement card.

The Majestic Theatre sign is a good illustration of the "name" sign. Flaming torches at the top operate continously; the star flashes up and down giving the expanding and contracting effect while the scrolls operate on high speed giving a traveling effect. The large star at the bottom flashes on and off and the tails and small stars flash on with a bursting or fireworks effect. The reading matter flashes word by word. The serpent or vine effect is shown in the other figure. Here the word "Dancing" also the scrolls work continuously with the other words "Bijou" and "Dream" alternate. This sign uses lamps equipped with color hoods by mean of which beautiful color effects are obtained.

These color hoods have been greatly improved during the last few years and are now in extensive use. Their color is permanent, far outlasting the old dipped lamp, besides being much easier to install and cheaper to maintain.

Artificial Plants Add to the Charm of the Theater

ALTHOUGH artificial plants and floral ornaments have found their greatest use as theatre decorations during the hot summer months there are multitude of ways in which they may be used during other seasons of the years. Unless care has been exercised during the planning and construction of the lobby there is apt to be a "cold look" about it. A few artificial ferns or palms scattered about will often change this coldness to an appearance of charm and comfort.

Corners are often awkward. Here again a potted plant will change the contour and give an entirely different appearance to the theatre entrance.

In remodeling the lobby it will often be found that floral decorations afford the cheapest means of getting the desired atmosphere. Some theatres have made use of trillis work over which imitation ivy or a similar floral growth is placed. This method of ornamentation is extremely effective.

The use of artificial plants in the summer is of unquestionable value. Practically all of the best known exhibitors realize the cooling effect of green plants placed about the lobby and auditorium and accordingly turn their theatre into imitation gardens during the hot days of July and August, which is of beneficial effect to patrons and adds delight and enjoyment to those who are or who are not artistically inclined.

A New Display Mat

THE International Film Service Co., will have ready by October 1, a new and novel lobby display mat on which are mounted still photographs concerning the current events as shown in the news reels issued by the company. The mat which was recently designed will more than likely meet with the approval of all exhibitors, as many orders have already been received from different parts of the country.

A new and novel lobby display mat by International

This exhibitor turned an unsightly fence into a valuable poster space

The mats are suitable for mounting in a one-sheet frame and provide for the exhibitor a constant source of lobby attraction. At the present time International photographs are seen in many windows of stores, and this new arrangement transfers much of the attention attracted to the lobby of the exhibitor. The mat is cut so as to accomodate five stills and the wording on the top is "International Newsyvents"—the second word being an original one that will be copyrighted. At the bottom of the mat a space is left for the exhibitor to fill in, in which the days on which the news reels are shown can be inserted.

The mats will be distributed through the Universal exchanges and many exchanges have already placed large orders for them. More than two hundred mats have been ordered for the Chicago exchange.

Providing a constant change in lobby display and yet a small expenditure, this mat arrangement will give to the exhibitor a long felt want. One great advantage of the plan as it is now being worked out is that of mailing the photographs even before the film is ready for distribution. In this way the exhibitor can have his still photographs in his lobby for public viewing even before the arrival of the film.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Short Subjects, Comedies and Other Features Reviewed on This Page

"The Eternal Triangle"

(Universal—Two Reels)

HERE is one of the richest little gems that ever graced the screen. It is a study in canine love and presents the eternal triangle with barking and tail-wagging complications. And it brings Norman Dawn, who staged the piece, into focus as a keen student of canine nature, an excellent trainer, and a very human sort of fellow. Any lover of dogs will go in raptures over this delightful study and those who do not fancy the pets will become their friends. You will feel like taking any stray, homely dog into your kitchen and giving him a beefsteak dinner. The title editor deserves praise in the manner he has enlivened the story with quaint phrasings—every one of which is remarkably rich in humor.

Mr. and Mrs. Collie are living happily with their little ones in their kennel home. Everything is serene and lovely until—well, a city chap, who rides around in luxurious limousines and calling himself Alexander Airedale, thinks it is high time to practise his wiles upon little Nell. Father Collie is away at business taking care of sheep. Little does he dream that his wife would leave him and their new-born children. So when he arrives home neighbors tell him that Nell has run away with an aristocrat from the city. A popular chap is papa Collie and he has no trouble in forming a posse to hunt the eloping couple and punish the despoiler. Dog, dogs, all kinds of dogs take up the chase, and with Mr. Bloodhound leading the way the sinners are discovered hiding in a barn. Alec is given his just deserts and Nell pleads for and wins her husband's forgiveness.

Mr. Dawn stops his story at times to contribute humorous and homely traits of his ensemble. It almost seems as if the dogs are endowed with human intelligence. A great number and one which could be featured. Make no mistake about it, the picture will add class to your program.—Laurence Reid.

"Uncle Tom Without the Cabin"

(Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

MACK SENNETT has burlesqued another old favorite here. You remember what he did with "East Lynne"—how he applied the variations. Well, this time he has taken po'h ol' Uncle Tom without his cabin and made it a thing not of pathos, but of bathos. The same methods are used as in "East Lynne with Variations." For instance the camera catches the audience as well as the performers. But it is not as funny as the former burlesque—not even with Ben Turpin as Uncle Tom. He crosses his eyes and Eliza crosses the ice, but there are not sufficient situations in the old standby to bring out the comicalities.

Of course everything goes wrong with the property effects—the ice is shown carrying on mischievously—and the race track scene reveals the tricky horses. The laughable part is the response of the audience, particularly where Ford Sterling is seated. Ben Turpin doubles—even triples in "brass" here, for he comes out mounted on a derelict steed and has to hasten back to his dressing room to appear as a spectator. Then he changes to his jockey clothes again for the grand climax. He makes a ridiculous Uncle Tom and Simon Legree brings out the laughs, thanks to the title editor. Marie Prevost is Eliza and she has an opportunity to display her shapely figure when she loses her clothes in crossing the ice.

The show stops and the old familiar specialties are revealed. Living reproductions of famous statues are burlesqued with Turpin, Lynn and Miss Prevost acting as the principals. Ben with his funny eyes runs a poor second to Marie with her pretty figure.—Laurence Reid.

"Count the Votes"

(Rolin Comedy—Harold Lloyd—Pathe—Single Reel—Released Oct. 5)

ERE you have a ridiculously funny one-reel comedy fit for any class audience. It is off at the jump and with one comedy situation after another it brings the chuckles and finally rocks the house in gales of "walthill" laughter.

Where the hero is induced to make a political reform speech before a bunch of saloon loafers headed by the political boss and all armed with Irish confetti is indeed a hilarious situation, and especially when he gets away with it.

There is not a dull spot in "Count the Votes" and Lloyd just naturally injects one piece of comedy business after another. And he is effective and clean.—Tom Hamlin.

Universal Screen Magazine—No. 32

UNIVERSAL'S latest screen Magazine comprises an interesting assortment of subjects and personalities. Opening with a cartoon, "How Queen Bees Duel to Death," which shows the punch of the stingaree, it leads us to Louis J. Britton, who is eighty-three years old and still sawing wood. Not quite as vigirous as he was sixty years ago, the old gentleman has rigged up a machine which accomplishes his labor with the least expenditure of energy. Next comes Lillian Russell and her beauty treatment. This time she instructs milady in the art of taking care of the hands. One must use olive oil and proper strokes to keep them looking soft and shapely.

Do you know how to tell when an egg is fresh? This is important. Simply take up a magnifying glass and hold the egg against a strong light. The shadows will tell you. Which brings us to "A Little Lesson in Golf." W. C. Skelly shows us how to build up the physique and the vocabulary at the same time in this pastime popularly called "cow pasture pool." "Knives and Forks of the Animal Kingdom" presents the teeth of the beaver, ditto the lion, ditto the elephant. Then a scientific number is shown which is too technical to detail. It concerns coal. And the futurist movies concludes the reel. This particular one introduces Josephus Daniels.—Laurence Reid.

"All That Glitters Is Not Goldfish"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

THE decorative title of the latest "Mutt and Jeff" is indicative of the foolishness of Bud Fisher's celebrated freaks. Whatever the "long and short" of it do, they are the best exponents of animated fooling at large. This time they are conducting a bird and fish store and as usual Mutt is living up to his reputation of being the laziest man on a paper's funny page. Little Jeff must do the dirty work. A woman comes in to purchase a gold fish. The proprietors are up against it for they do not deal in the parlor pet.

So Jeff, being the smallest, is dispatched to a fish market to capture a cod, dead or alive (the fish, not the freak). And paints it yellow. But he does not get his fins (Jeff's, not the cod's) upon the slippery thing than it eludes him in the most taunting manner. It darts around the corner, shimmies up a pole, flirts with Jeff and whales him with its tail, jumps up a policeman's trousers, hops into a baby carriage, where it is wheeled home by a nurse. Jeff, thoroughly outwitted, returns to get a fish hound. So with this animal on the trail the chase is begun all over again. The dog discovers the scent (who wouldn't smell a cod), and leads Jeff to the policeman and to the house of the baby carriage.

There you have an anxious moment. An old maid is taking a bath and the fish and the hound and, finally, little Jeff hop into the tub one after the other. But the fish is an elusive rascal and hops out again. So hitching the dog to the tub, Jeff drives right through the wall of the house. And the chase is on. The fish insults the customer by slapping her with its tail. A funny number with Fisher, Mutt and Jeff at their best.—Laurence Reid.

"Going South"

(Ford Educational—Goldwyn)

THE Ford Educationals are rightly named since they are acting as guides through American cities. To the spectator who has always longed to see what New Orleans and St. Augustine look like, the camera will enlighten him. The city, settled by the French, is especially rich in atmosphere, while St. Augustine, settled by the Spaniards, is rich in historical lore. Not a scene or building of any consequence is missing in New Orleans. The most interesting point is its old French quarter which has withstood the wheels of progress.

So on to St. Augustine, the oldest city in America. Founded by Ponce de Leon, the explorer in search of the waters of eternal youth, it shows the very spot where he landed and the fountain from which he drank. Spanish architecture prevails in all the buildings and the city generates a feeling of contentment because of its atmosphere. "Going South" is a most interesting journey. Let us have more like it.—Laurence Reid.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last seventeen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to June 8, 1919.

ACE OF THE SADDLE (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY (AUGUST 18)...JULY 19

"THE SPEED MANIAC"
(FOX)

Topsy-Turvy Story Offers Mild Entertainment

IN all probability the popularity of Tom Mix will be responsible for the success of this picture. The story is palpably of the "hurry-up" order since it is conceived with no thought of plot and characterization, but merely to provide the star with a new assortment of stunts. It is far from being another "Rough Riding Romance," because that stunt picture was constructed with but one idea—to emphasize the star's athletic prowess. Furthermore, one did not have to bother looking for an idea—there wasn't any. And the rapidity of action emphasized its character.

Here a story attempts to intrude, but which is so crudely developed and so lacking in continuity that it only succeeds in befogging the issue. The picture gets into its stride in the closing reels and the flagging interest picks up when Mix presents himself in the untried role of a prizefighter.

And when he breezes home the winner in the auto classic one will forgive and forget such touching scenes as children cowering in fear from derelict women sopping up 2.75% and "desperate desmonds" applying deep-dyed villainy in the shape of knockout drops. Mr. Mix literally carries the piece on his shoulders.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Oct. 19.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Mix, the talented and athletic star, will be seen at the ——— theatre again on ——— of ——— week His latest picture is "The Speed Maniac," and judging from the praise it has received from reliable critics is one of the best in his highly exciting series of productions. From the introductory scene until the final close-up the action mingles thrills and laughs in such generous proportions that the interest is never once allowed to drop. The story for "The Speed Maniac" was written by H. H. Van Loan and produced under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint. The latter has kept the action always spontaneous and the original way he has of doing things makes the picture appear in a refreshing light.

Mr. Mix assumes the role of Billy Porter, a ranch owner, who gives up country life for the more strenuous one of the city. No sooner does he step off the 'Frisco ferry-boat than he is fleeced out of his money. A little newsboy extends him so much sympathy that Billy takes him in charge and also his father, a pugilist. And trains the latter for the bout with "Tiger" Doran. But Knockout's good right arm is feared and when the moment of the fight arrives the enemy camp see to it that he is drugged. With a sum of $5,000 on the fight, Billy is forced to enter the ring himself or forfeit the money. And he wins via the knockout route. In the meantime Billy meets the only girl and his father whom he has never known. The latter places him in the auto race and the young man travels home the victor. Among other things he stops a runaway team and displays his skilful horsemanship.

Quite a big assignment for one lone man but suffice to say that Billy acquits himself with glory before the picture is done. Mr. Mix is supported by a competent cast.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have played the other Tom Mix features recently you should have no trouble in bringing in the crowds for this one. Reports indicate that his pictures are going like wildfire all over the country, which is only natural considering that he has an emphatic personality and an ability to execute stunts. His fearlessness, his talent to perform impossible feats, his clean-cut manner—these qualities will appeal to anyone. All that is really necessary in announcing "The Speed Maniac" is to lay stress on the stunts and the heart interest and to play Mix's name up to the limit.

You can't go wrong if you follow this course. For the rest the picture will advertise itself if you give it a chance by playing it more than a single day.

PROGRAM READER

He might be a ranchman and not know many things about city life or how to protect his bank-roll but he knew how to take care of himself in a pinch and also some other people. If the only girl was caught in a runaway and the horses became unmanageable—well Billy could stop them. He couldn't take care of his heart for she stole it out of gratitude. But Billy found 'Frisco a regular man's town. And the pride of the prize ring, Knockout McClusky, lived there. Now "Mac" couldn't keep his balance so Billy offered to take care of him. And train him.

The big fight was on but "Mac" couldn't be found anywhere. There was a reason. He had been drugged by the enemy camp. So there was nothing to do but Billy must enter the ring and save the money from being forfeited. He won. Billy did other things too which cannot be detailed because they are so numerous. Sounds interesting doesn't it? Well the rest of it is more so. The rest of it will be found in Tom Mix's newest picture, "The Speed Maniac," which comes to this theatre next ———.

Tom Mix, featured in the Fox production "The Speed Maniac"

CATCH LINES

Tom Mix always does the unusual in his pictures. Sometimes it is showing some new thing in riding a horse—other times it is displaying his athletic ability as a boxer. In "The Speed Maniac" there are some fine new stunts, new comedy, new thrills. Don't fail to see it.

He sold his ranch and went to 'Frisco to make his way in the commercial field. But being an adventurous fellow the channels of business looked pretty tame. So he became a prize-fighter and a speed devil with a motor car. Follow him in "The Speed Maniac."

They drugged the pugilist and thought they would win the money through a forfeit. But they didn't reckon on the trainer. Unknown and with no reputation as a fighter, he entered the ring and came through the victor. See Tom Mix in a new role in "The Speed Maniac."

"THE FALSE CODE"
(KEENAN-PATHE)

Keenan Has Dominant Role in Interesting Drama

DID you ever stop to consider that Frank Keenan's position on the screen is unique? Among all the masculine stars he is the only one who does not rely upon that ingredient known as romance to capitalize his personality. An actor along in years, it is his allotment to exploit himself through his gift for characterization. Sentimental journeys can be saved for romantic actors while he revels in plot complications and character studies.

"The False Code" presents him again in one of his dominating roles, though this time he creates more sympathy for himself than in his recent pictures, simply because he is a victim of blind justice. A man of humble pride and honesty, the role brings out his power of characterization. Conscience leaves him and he stoops to the primal passions of hate and revenge. How the star exacts retribution provides the dramatic meat of "The False Code."

The picture develops melodramatically and maintains its suspense to the end. Each scene succeeds its forerunner with ever increasing interest and the situations build to powerful climaxes. Mr. Keenan gives a compelling performance, though his fault of elaborating his scenes stays the action to some extent.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Sept. 21.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Frank Keenan, than whom there is no better character on the screen, will come to the ——— on ——— of ——— week in his newest Pathe picture, "The False Code." This is a drama of love, hate and vengence, centering about an unusually powerful figure John Benton, the character portrayed by the star. It is a part which fits Mr. Keenan particularly well since he is possessed of a dominant, dynamic personality. John Benton is a shipbuilder who is sent to jail for twelve years though he is innocent of any crime. A man of honor, he falls into a trap set for him by his business partner.

The plan is conceived of installing inadequate boilers in an old hulk and loading it with a heavily insured fake cargo. The vessel blows up on schedule time but the boiler inspector, frightened by the act, commits suicide. This arouses the suspicion of the insurance officials. An investigation follows with the result that evidence points to Benton as the guilty man. Torn from his wife and child and sentenced to prison for a term of years, Benton schemes and plots a revenge that must compensate him for the loss of his home, his wife, his business and his good name. The partner meets his just deserts but when Benton is about to turn upon Grey, he realizes that his daughter is the sweethart of the banker's son.

It is a highly entertaining drama this Keenan picture and the star gives a masterly performance. The cast is a capable one and includes such well known players as Edward Brady, Joseph Dowling, Jean Calhoun and Pell Trenton. Ernest C. Warde directed.

PROGRAM READER

"As sure as there is a God in heaven, you shall pay for this!" With these startling words ringing in the ears of the conspirators, John Benton, the shipbuilder went to prison—went for twelve long years. An upright man, he could not countenance anything unscrupulous. But his business partner saw his chance to make a fortune out of a fraudulent transaction. The conspiracy was well framed and Benton was forced to go to prison for a crime of which he was innocent. Twelve long years he waited—twelve long years he planned his revenge. The scoundrels had robbed him of everything. He lost his home, his wife, his business and his good name. But he could wait, could John Benton. Oh, revenge was sweet and he was certain of success!

How he took the law into his own hands because it was swift and sure is told in a series of compelling climaxes. An exciting entertainment is "The False Code" which brings Frank Keenan to the ——— screen very shortly.

A character pose by Frank Keenan in "The False Code," a Pathe release

SUGGESTIONS

No exhibitor need be told the proper manner in which to advertise the Frank Keenan pictures. While he does not show a great deal of variety in his characterizations, yet this similarity is an excellent thing to concentrate upon in your arguments. His magnetism and personality carry him through to complete success in every one of his features. So make much of his attributes. There is no romance connected with his portrayals. He is an actor, an interpreter of deeper things. Play up that he is seen again in one of his dominating, compelling roles.

Tell that it is a story of love, hate and revenge—of how a man takes the law in his own hands because such a plan is swift and certain of success. Bring out that the picture is representative of his forceful personality. Let your patrons know that a Keenan subject is always endowed with a rugged quality. Make out that the picture is red-blooded, and vital, and vivid. Play up the mystery note that is suggested in the title. And mention other pictures in which the star has appeared. Send out your circular letters and novelty code cards. Use catch lines liberally.

CATCH LINES

Frank Keenan, America's greatest character actor, comes to the ——— theatre next ——— in the most compelling role of his screen career. To miss seeing him is to miss an unusually good entertainment. He appears in a play of revenge.

See "The False Code"—a picture of a despicable frame-up against a perfectly innocent man who is sent to jail for twelve years. What happens when he comes out? You must find out for yourself next ——— and evening.

"Revenge is Mine" he cried when released from a long term in prison.—Years of hell endured for another's crime. But he would abide his time and wait to execute his revenge. Follow Frank Keenan in his greatest role in "The False Code."

"ARE YOU LEGALLY MARRIED"
(ELK PHOTOPLAYS INC.)

Interesting Moments on a Vital Theme

THE sponsors of this picture have cited a page from a dusty law book as the piece de resistance of their offering. And sensation seekers are apt to be disappointed if they bank too highly upon the personal character of the decorative title, for it is simply propaganda based upon the vital question of divorce. A plea is made for a uniform divorce law which would save 600,000 couples the stigma of being illegally married.

Interesting and vital as this theme is, it does not travel far as dramatic fare, since it precludes the value of action and suspense by reason of its preachment uncovered in the shape of legal advice. To force the message home a test case is made of an ex-husband who succeeds in proving his ex-wife a bigamist. It is quiet of movement, the characters simply grouping themselves about and indulging in lengthy word pictures. Consequently the interest flags because of its dramatic shortcomings.

The highlights are incorporated in the captions and not in the action. Still it is meritorious because it has something to say. The sensational aspect of the title loses its sting in the stimulating thought of the propaganda. The picture is adequately staged and acted by a capable cast.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Are You Legally Married?" will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The theme of this picture is a vital one inasmuch as it concerns the national question of divorce. It is estimated that there are 600,000 couples in the United States who could be declared illegally married if one wanted to confront them with legal proceedings. If these couples have ever been divorced it is authentically stated that if they are married again their children would be illegitimate. And so an example is drawn based upon the above facts.

You are introduced to June Redding who arrives in New York from the West to visit her uncle. Fate throws her into the path of John Stark, a man of charming maners but little character, and after a brief courtship she marries him. When he presents himself in his true colors, June, unable to stand his dissipation any longer, goes to Reno and obtains a divorce. Real happiness comes to her for a time for she enters the marriage state again with Wayne Hearne, a man of honor. And a child comes to bless the union. In the meantime Stark has descended the social scale and hard-pressed for money, he decides to blackmail his former wife when he accidently discovers that she is not legally married according to the divorce laws of the state.

Armed with this amazing evidence Stark succeeds in obtaining money from June. Her husband realizes that there is an axiom of truth in Stark's threats. So the case is brought to court and the decision is that June is not legally married to Wayne. But happiness comes to the couple when Stark, in his eagerness to elude Hearne, meets his death through an accident. An excellent cast has been selected to interpret the drama.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever consider the subject of matrimony from a legal standpoint? Probably not. "That is a subject for the lawyers," you will say. But if you and thousands and thousands of others had given it a thought there would be less innocent bigamy in the land. Did you know that there are 600,000 couples in America who are illegally married—who have been divorced and who are married again. What is lawful in one State is unlawful in another. Not until we have a uniform divorce law can the legality of marriage be certain.

Which is by way of introducing the big, throbbing picture, "Are You Legally Married?" This drama is based upon the tremendously important and vital theme of marriage and divorce. It tells you something which has never entered your mind before. It shows that the holy state of matrimony may be based upon shallow foundations because the governing bodies of the States have not given it any thought. So manager ——— in presenting this drama is giving you a rich subject. Remember the date ——— the ——— at the ———.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this picture is the angle to concentrate upon in your exploitation. Surely a big one isn't it? And it will make your patrons think. So feature it in a big showy way. Then tell a few facts in the way of catch lines written around the title. Don't give the plot away for the title suggests mystery. Spectators should be kept in the dark concerning the nature of the theme. Because it will make itself felt all the stronger once they realize its import. Merely state that it has to do with marriage and divorce.

The picture should attract wide attention through its title. So play it up for all you are worth. Insert teasers in the newspapers with just the title. It will excite curiosity and make people wonder what it is all about. But do it far in advance of the picture. Then flash your announcement at the proper moment. Use this campaign in circularizing your town. Run throwaways, door-knob hangers, and teasers about the town. Get in touch with civic betterment societies and secure their endorsements and then print them. Attractive sheets are supplied by the company. Get them.

CATCH LINES

Are you legally married? You may have committed bigamy without knowing it. But you can decide for yourself when you see the big, vital picture, "Are You Legally Married?"

Do you know that there are 600,000 couples in the United States who are illegally married? Why? Because there is no uniform divorce law. What may be classified as marriage in one State may be bigamy in another. See "Are You Legally Married?"

Are you legally married? How do you know whether you are or not? Come to the ——— and find out.

Lytell Scores as Modiste in Unique Picture

TO one who has seen this picture in the original, it may prove disappointing because the screen cannot hope to catch its vital sparks. A plot which offers no variety of situations, but depends upon its sparkling dialogue cannot reach big dimensions upon the silversheet, for the spoken word is what gives it life.

Yet it is sure to be met with appreciation because the sponsors have had the foresight to substitute the rare and racy dialogue, the Hatton flair for comedy, found in the original, with a deep vein of romance, a not of heart interest and a dash of sentimental paprika. And to make it sparkle further the subtitles are flavored with ginger. So a clever farce-comedy becomes an enjoyable comedy-drama. A difficult achievement considering its original spirit. All credit to the sponsors and the players.

There are moments when the action drags, but for the most part it moves spontaneously. Of course, the limitations of the spoken version are noticeable in the pictorial embellishments. It has been produced with lavish disregard of expense. The ensemble, the array of beautiful gowns will certainly carry an appeal for feminine audiences. It is unique and interesting. Bert Lytell acquits himself splendidly in a difficult assignment. His players render capable assistance.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Lombardi, Ltd.," the Metro production starring the popular Bert Lytell, will be the feature attraction at the ——— theatre beginning ———. This is an adaptation of the highly successful comedy by Frederick and Fany Hatton and it is variously described as a fashion show, and a diverting humorous study with the star in the unusual role of a male modiste. Lombardi caters to a very select clientele and his gift of design has brought him a reputation and financial success. He has struggled upward to his dreams until they are embodied in the sign, "Lombardi, Ltd.," outside the smartest shop on Fifth Avenue.

Now Tito Lombardi has another ambition—to win a most beautiful girl for his wife. In the midst of this second conquest he discovers that his business will not run by itself. Fortunately he has Norah, who, by lending her practical views, keeps him from expressing his temperamental fancies. And there is Hodkins, the bookkeeper who is a practical man. But Lombardi is truthful with his rich customers and it happens that they are not exactly prompt in their payments. Particularly the theatrical house of Strohm.

So the business skids to the danger point. To make matters worse the modiste's sweetheart proves false by eloping with a man about town. But Norah has remained faithful through all his vicissitudes and when he has no one to turn to, she, it is, who comforts him. And his heart is awakened to genuine love for her. A friend saves the business from going into bankruptcy and Lombardi, Ltd., continues as before.

SUGGESTIONS

The picture offers unlimited opportunities for successful exploitation. First off you have its record of a year's run on Broadway and on tour. Then the names of the authors stand for something. They are supreme in the field of light comedy. So play them up big. Feature the star and what he has done in the past. Mention his versatility. Boost the lavishness of the production and that it not only presents an interesting comedy-drama, but offers a distinctive fashion show. You should make an especial bid for feminine patronage as it shows what well dressed women are wearing and will wear.

Use the teaser campaign. You can get up a lot of interesting copy around the title and the story and character. Advertise the Follies beauties who are the models in the picture. Excite curiosity by unique lobby display. Clothes hangers would be an excellent idea.

Bert Lytell in his Latest Metro picture, "Lombardi, Ltd."

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— of the ——— theatre takes great pleasure in announcing that the Screen Classics, Inc., production, "Lombardi, Ltd.," with the engaging Bert Lytell as the star, will be shown next ———. It is a picturization of the clever stage comedy of modes and moods by Frederick and Fanny Hatton that ran a whole season in New York and more than a year on the road. It has been made into an appealing screen comedy-drama with a production of lavish beauty. It is the tale of a male modiste, a designer of gowns for the smart set of New York.

And you will follow his romance, his trials and tribulations with the greatest interest. There are beautiful girls galore and they are gowned in the latest models. How Tito Lombardi, the character portrayed by ingratiating Bert Lytell, becomes successful in love and busines, is revealed in a rich assortment of dramatic high lights. We trust you will not miss the opportunity to pass a most enjoyable hour at the ———. It is decidedly worth while.

CATCH LINES

See "Lombardi, Ltd.," with Bert Lytell as the male modiste. See Girls! Girls!! Girls!!! They are all about. A rich comedy-drama adapted from the famous stage success.

Glorious Girls—Glorious Gowns—Glorious Settings—and Gales of Giggles. That's what "Lombardi, Ltd.," offers you. And Bert Lytell appears as a male dressmaker.

See "Lombardi, Ltd.,"—a picture made from the famous comedy of moods and modes by Frederick and Fanny Hatton. You will see Bert Lytell as a great lover, a genius and failure. You will see styles—you will see glorious girls attired in glorious gowns.

Beautiful girls all around him, yet he remained faithful to one alone. And when she played him false, what happened?

"SOMEONE MUST PAY"
(ABRAMSON-GRAPHIC)

The Best Abramson Picture to Date

THIS is undoubtedly a far better picture than Ivan Abramson has ever produced, and also quite different from his former themes. And a very capable cast of well known names interpret the roles. It is absolutely clean throughout and has a good suspensive interest with a logical happy ending.

A jealous husband is responsible for the one tragedy in this domestic drama of New York's well-to-do. The picture plants a good moral, and direction, continuity and photography are up to standard.

THE CAST

Regina Taylor.....Gail Kane
Charles Bryant.....Edmund Breese
Sylvia Adams.....Jackie Saunders
Henry Taylor.....Hugh Thompson
Marshall Taylor.....Jere Austin
Vivian Taylor.....Dorothy Arnold
Produced by Graphic Film Corporation.
Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Someone Must Pay" comes to the —— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

This was written and directed by Ivan Abramson for Graphic Film Corporation and the much abused phrase of an "all-star cast" is said to have been vindicated by the following list of notable screen artists that appear in this picture: Gail Kane, Edmund Breese, Jackie Saunders, Hugh Thompson, Jere Austin and Dorothy Arnold, the clever child performer.

The husband is very jealous of the attentions paid to his beautiful wife by an elderly New York bachelor. On returning from his office one day he finds his wife in this man's arms. At least it looked that way to him and he was furious.

He forbade the man the house and the bachelor left without a word of excuse for his apparent actions. Their bright little baby soon after received a gift of a little shetland pony from the same man. And this made the husband more angry, although the wife protested that the gift was made from a friendly affection the bachelor had for the child.

When the husband becomes financially embarrassed temporarily he uses some stocks not belonging to him and is arrested. The wife in a desperate effort to raise the necessary money before morning reluctantly accepts $35,000 from the bachelor. When the husband learns of this he secures a revolver and shoots the bachelor. The wounded man refuses to prosecute but the state is determined to convict him of assault with intent to kill.

Then the bachelor again comes to the rescue and in the startling denouement that follows the young couple again finds happiness.

There is another romantic story going on all through this dramatic series of events. The husband's brother is a woman-hater and a certain young woman exercises her wiles upon him so successfully that he gladly withdraws from the bachelors' club.

This is declared to be the best production that this versatile director has turned out in his long list of pictures.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have this picture booked your best bet is to tie in the various members of the cast with the title. Each has a following and the different names used in connection with the title will be certain to excite attention, especially if you snipe and use throw-aways, etc.

For instance, "Gail Kane and an all-star cast in "Someone Must Pay," and on another card, "Edmund Breese and an all-star cast in 'Someone Must Pay,'" and then, "Jackie Saunders and an all-star cast in 'Someone Must Pay,'" etc., with Hugh Thompson and Jere Austin's names handled in the same way.

And the catch lines should be used in connection with the title in your newspaper advertising especially. The title is elastic enough to answer all purposes.

Hugh Thompson and Gail Kane in a tense moment from the Ivan Abramson feature "Someone Must Pay"

PROGRAM READER

He saw his wife in another man's arms.

Being a very jealous husband he saw red. Wih difficulty he restrained himself from committing any violence, but tersely forbade this man the house thereafter.

Then a shetland pony was presented to their baby by the same man.

This further infuriated the young husband, although his wife declared that it was simply their friend's love of the little child that impelled him to make the present.

When the husband became involved into financial difficulties he was arrested.

The wife frantically trying to raise the sum of money necessary to save him finally accepted the money from this same friend. But the husband did not know where the money came from until later. And when he did find out he was a frenzied maniac and seizing a revolver he shot this same "friend."

Although his victim was not fatally wounded the young husband was placed on trial. Then the denouement. To get this remarkable denouement in dramatic form you must attend this theatre next week and see Ivan Abramson's tremendous screen success "Someone Must Pay."

In the all-star cast is Gail Kane, Edmund Breese, Jackie Saunders, Hugh Thompson and Jere Austin.

CATCH LINES

For the actions of a jealous husband, someone must pay.

Someone must pay for the extravagances of the spendthrifts.

For the thoughtlessness of a wife someone must pay.

Someone must pay for a misplaced love.

For even the appearance of evil someone must pay.

Someone must pay for cruelly misjudging an innocent woman.

"THE SPITE BRIDE"
(SELZNICK-SELECT)

A Very Good Olive Thomas Picture

TWO wealthy young bloods of Manhattan meet a couple of stage girls and in a fit of pique, because he had been jilted by his society sweetheart, one youth marries the littlest show girl that same night. A very good Olive Thomas picture.

This is not heavy but is a good "sight" picture, pleasantly entertaining, capably directed, and interpreted by a well balanced cast. It is interspersed with some very clever subtitles. The story and continuity brings the happy finale.

Arthur Derford.....Lamar Johnston
Countess di Raspoli.....Katherine Griffith
Story by Louise Winter.
Directed by Charles Giblyn.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The little Selznick star is said to have the best role of her successful screen career in this story by Louise Winter, directed by Charles Giblyn.

She has the role of a little winsome country girl who came to New York and joined an actress in a "sister act" for vaudeville. Two young men of the wealthy class occupy a box one night and afterwards come around to the stage door.

They want to meet the girls and tell them where they can earn a thousand dollars upon a strictly business proposition that will not disturb anybody's morals. Tessa did not want to go but the actress insisted that she was particularly hard up and needed the money.

It seemed that one of the young men had been jilted by his society sweetheart that day and in a fit of pique determines to marry a stage girl so that the papers will be full of it afterwards and humiliate his former fiancee.

Of course he will immediately give the little stage girl a thousand dollars and be her husband in name only until she secures the divorce at Reno.

And little Tessa was cast for the part and reluctantly accepted to please her female partner. It is the aftermath of all this with the comedy and pathos and the romance, that continues to an unexpected but happy ending.

When the settlement is finally made after a yacht trip and a kidnapping the little wife rebels against her theatrical partner and refuses to accept any of the money paid by her husband. She then secures a position as secretary to a woman who turns out to be the mother of her husband.

There are some more dramatic moments and a shot that brings a near-tragedy, but the husband through it all finds that he really loves his wife and also finds that the little stage girl is really a child of innocence and worthy of his great love.

CATCH LINES

She was only a spite bride whom he married in haste and she repented at his leisure.

For a thousand dollars she was willing to be a wife in name only, but it was such a deucedly long way to Reno.

In a fit of pique he marries another girl whom he had known only a few hours.

He was drunk, disorderly, a kidnapper and wedded in about sixty minutes. And yet they say the world is getting slow.

Some women are easy to get and hard to lose. But she was hard to get and easy to lose. Then he almost killed himself trying to find her again.

Olive Thomas is featured in the Selznick production "The Spite Bride," released through Select Pictures Corp.

PROGRAM READER

He married her just to spite the other girl who had jilted him for another.

She was just a little stage girl and was to be his wife in name only.

The trip to Reno was to free him from her afterwards with any morals that she might have had, left undisturbed.

And she was to receive one thousand dollars for going through the ceremony.—She needed the money but afterwards refused to accept the cash payment offered.

Besides that he was actually drunk when they were married in the early hours of a foggy New York morning.

This was really a complicated state of affairs. The young man was a clean young man at heart although a little wild. And the girl was innocent and he had misjudged her caliber because of her environments.

When true love begins to take hold of a couple through mutual troubles it will find an outlet somewhere. But their paths apparently led far apart.

After quitting the stage the little woman secured a position as secreary to a Countess who had recently married. How was she to know that this woman was her husband's mother.

And then the beautiful finale.

Next week at this theatre the little Selznick star, Olive Thomas will appear in "The Spite Bride."

We commend it to you.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture your first and best bet is to take advantage of the trademark. The name "Selznick" has long been connected with successful motion picture productions and at this particular time the company is exploiting the name throughout the land the same as they are in New York, according to report.

And then Olive Thomas has a following and her name should also be prominently mentioned in all your exploitation. The title is catching; "The Spite Bride" is suggestive of a sweet little romance and with the catch lines possible on this elastic title the attention of the public should be easily drawn to this vehicle.

(WORLD)

An Average World Program Picture

THIS is one of those stories that show a young woman and a middle aged woman on an apparently secluded island, and a band of crooks on an adjacent isle, with a secret service man, two constables and three friendly fishermen in the offing.

It aims at thrills and light comedy with villainy and airy romance and can be safely branded an average World Program picture. Star and cast get by and the sets are appropriate, with the photography up to standard. Direction and continuity are fair.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing: Elite, ordinary puller and fairly pleasing; Family, average puller and fairly pleasing: Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 29.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Two women on an island inhabited by a band of crooks are depicted in "Miss Crusoe," the World Picture scheduled for a ——— days run at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

Virginia Hammond is the star and Rod La Rocque is the leading man. The girl is a chemist in her aunt's school for girls. During the vacation the aunt and her niece decide to rent a cottage on an island. As this happens to be the only cottage on this particular island they feel that they will enjoy the seclusion and that the elderly aunt can indulge in her pet desire of wearing men's clothes.

The old boatman is told that they are man and wife. On the steamer carrying them towards their destination they see a youthful fellow, who is under arrest, escape from his captors by jumping overboard. He is given up for dead but later on he turns up at the island.

When the band of crooks, who have been using the cottage, learn that the cottage has been rented they leave for an adjacent island but forgot to take a bottle of nitro-glycerine with them. When the heroine discovers this bottle she knows what it is immediately and her suspicions are aroused when they attempt to get it back.

The escaped youth has joined the band, but in realty he is a secret service man. He volunteers to get the bottle of "soup" for the gang and the young lady is waiting for him at midnight with a revolver. When he allows her to tie him up he is content, as he has fallen in love with the heroine.

And right during this scene occurs some of the most amusing attempts at courting ever witnessed. But the thrill is furnished when the gang try to storm the house and the girl captures them by threatening to drop the bottle of nitro-glycerine on the floor.

The real humor of this is appreciated when it develops that she had previously emptied the bottle of its dangerous contents and nothing more explosive than her aunt's heart medicine was in the bottle.

PROGRAM READER

These two women thought that they were alone on the island but found themselves surrounded by a band of bandits.

Even the boatman who brought them there could not be trusted as he was allied with the crooks. In fact he wanted to scare the two women so that they would leave the island voluntarily.

But they had rented the single cottage for their vacation and the younger woman was determined to stay. And her aunt was thus given the opportunity of wearing men's clothes—a longing she had cherished since childhood.

When the young heroine awakened in the darkest hour of the night and heard some one prowling about she bravely rose to the occasion. She covered the burglar with a revolver and tied him to a chair. When she discovered that he was such a clean handsome youth she tried to put some noble thoughts in his mind.

Virginia Hammond is starred in the World feature "Miss Crusoe"

There were many opportunities for the young fellow to escape that night, but he was enjoying himself so thoroughly that he wouldn't try to make a getaway for a thousand dollars. Just then the necessary thrill was supplied. The band of crooks were determined to rescue him in spite of himself.

A bottle of nitro-glycerine left previously by the burglars was branished by the heroic miss and she turned the tables.

But before the night was over she was pledged to wed.

This interesting story is told in the World Picture coming to this theatre next week. The title is "Miss Crusoe" and Virginia Hammond is the star.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked you can make a profuse display of the photographs as the many scenes are appealing enough to awaken attention and interest. The situation of two women alone on an island with a band of crooks near at hand generally means excitement and entertainment.

Therefore the catch lines used for snipe advertising should prove effective. A book store tie-in is possible on "Robinson Crusoe" with your "Miss Crusoe" placard in the center of the window. Virginia Hammond was once leading woman for E. H. Sothern in "If I Were King." This should be mentioned in a classy announcement mailed to your society list.

CATCH LINES

Young woman: What would you do if you were practically alone on an island and a band of bandits was about to land?

In the middle of the night in the only cottage on the island, she heard a prowler.

A bottle of her aunt's medicine looked like nitro-glycerine. And it was just as effective.

One girl put the bluff behind the "soup" and wins out over a gang of thugs.

The lonely island brought her romance fairly thrown up by the raging sea.

"STEPPING OUT"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Pleasantly Planting a Good Thought

AN appealing and wholesome domestic drama that every married man and woman should see. The younger couples will especially profit by witnessing this picture. Not a preachment, but very interesting, entertaining, instructive, and pleasantly planting a good thought.

Star, cast, direction, sets and photography are up to standard, and this is a generally better all around picture than Miss Bennet has appeared in for some time.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing: Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and wholly pleasing: Labor, average puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 21.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Enid Bennett's latest Paramount Picture produced by Thomas H. Ince is entitled "Stepping Out," and comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days run starting———.

C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story and Niles Welch is Miss Bennett's leading man.

In an effort to help her husband and little baby the young wife has willingly become a regular household drudge. She presses his clothes and washes his shirts so that he may look presentable in the offices where he is employed at twenty-five dollars a week.

He has been attracted by the nifty appearance of a stenographer employed at the office and rather neglects his wife. But when he forgets the wedding anniversary and her birthday and chides his wife for her appearance and says that she would never capture a prize at a beauty show, this was the climax.

She learns that her husband had gone to luncheon with the stenographer and determines to "step out" herself. Through some good mutual friends whom she is dining with one night at a big cafe she meets her husband's employer. They dance together and he is apparently quite smitten with her. Then she catches a view of her husband at another table with the stenographer.

The wife asks the stenographer to visit her home and offers to serve hash, as that is all the husband can afford, she says. In a quarrel later with her husband she leaves with his mother and the baby. The husband begins to see the light after she has been gone for several days. But their whereabouts is a secret.

When she gives him the opportunity of seeing the baby he seizes his chance of making amends and finally convinces her that he is a changed man. Happiness then crowns this prospective domestic tragedy and a good moral is planted.

CATCH LINES

Where a drudging housewife was unappreciated and went on strike.

Does your husband's love and affection endure through the third year?

Is your man as ardent as he was during the happy days of youthful courtship?

The unpardonable sin is when your husband forgets the wedding anniversary and your birthday.

Does the nifty stenographer look better to your husband at noon than you do at seven A. M?

If the wife does the labor around the house should the husband pride himself upon being the sole provider.

Enid Bennett in the Paramount feature "Stepping Out," a Thomas Ince production

PROGRAM READER

To Young House-Wives:

Are you content to remain a household drudge and press your husband's trousers, wash his shirts, etc., etc.?

Or would you rather "step out" and see some life?

Of course if your husband is appreciative of what you are doing we know that you are both contented and happy.

But does he appreciate what you are doing and does he show you the same loving affection as he did in his courting days?

If he does not—we have a remedy.

Coax him to come to this theatre next week.

And if he will not be coaxed, drag him here by the heels.

Thomas H. Ince has produced a picture for Paramount that just about reaches into the household affairs of every young married couple.

It is coming to this theatre for a ——— days' run beginning ———.

"Stepping Out" is the title; Enid Bennett is the star.

SUGGESTIONS

It's the title and theme combined with the catch lines and material from the program reader on this page that will help strongly in exploiting this picture after you have booked it.

Of course there are three names of great value also—Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince, and Paramount. But the theme and title are your best bets. They strike home to practically every married couple and will also attract those contemplating marriage. A door-knob card hung to doors throughout the residence districts could be used to great effect with the following words thereon: "Drudging Housewives can escape toil for a few hours and probably forever by bringing their husbands to see 'Stepping Out' at the ——— theatre ———.

"THE DRAGON PAINTER"
(ROBERTSON-COLE-EXHIBITORS MUTUAL

A Drama of Beauty and Artistic Values

STRIPPED of its story, this picture would pass for an Outing-Chester. The story itself is suggestive of an old legend of the land of its locale, Japan. That a film so realistic of the Orient can be produced in California is almost beyond belief, but here it is a gem of its kind.

If this were an American story, produced with an American cast, we might say the picture lacked substance, for as drama in the ordinary sense the plot is slender, but since it is a fairy story sort of a creation, with hardly a sequence which is not wonderful both scenically and in its Japanese atmosphere, telling the love story of a Japanese artist of the mountains who in a half mad sort of way is searching for his "Dragon Princess," whom he at last finds in the person of the daughter of the master painter of dragons of his native land, we can only give the production the highest praise.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Tatsu .....Sessue Hayakawa
Undo Uchida.....Toyo Fujita
Kano Indara.....Edward Peil
Ume Ko.....Tsuru Aoki
Directed by William Worthington.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese emotional star, who is alone in his portrayal of Oriental roles, is coming to the ——— theatre in a new and different photoplay entitled "The Dragon Painter," in which Hayakawa is a half-mad Japanese artist who dwells in the mountains ever searching for his "dragon princess."

He paints because he can not find his mate and his creations rival those of the master himself who mourns because his only child is a girl and there will be no one to perpetuate his honored name.

Fate brings the artist of the mountains to the home of the artist of the city. The master's daughter is Tatsu's "dragon princess."

They marry and all are happy, Tatsu and Ume Ko in their love, the master in his artist son, who will succeed him and bring further glory to the name of Kano Indara.

But a strange thing has happened. Love and happiness have robbed Tatsu of his skill and his ambition. When Ume Ko realizes this she plans to disappear believing that Tatsu's artist soul will return.

Tatsu believes her dead and lethargy and hopelessness are successors to happiness and lack of ambition until one day a vision comes to him is which his dragon princess wills that he should again wield his brush. He begins and his paintings bring him fame and fortune.

It is then that he hears that his dragon princess is not dead, but is but gone from his side that be may succeed in his great art, and when Tatsu learns that part of loving is to work for the object of his affection, she returns to bis side to live happy ever after.

It is a strange fanciful tale, this latest picture of Hayakawa's; one suggestive that its origin be in an old Japanese legend, and it bas been surrounded by the most beautiful scenery ever photographed. Tsuru Aoki, the talented Japanese actress, has the role of the dragon princess, and practically the entire cast is Japanese.

PROGRAM READER

You will like this latest picture of Hayakawa's, for it is different and has no tragic moments. The star does not have to give up tbe woman be loves because of his race nor does he do any of the things which have divided your sympathies as have many of his pictures in the past. This is a romance of Japan, with Japanese ways and Japanese customs faithfully portrayed.

The star is an artist who searches for his "dragon princess." He finally finds her and after due time life's patbway smoothes out for Tatsu and Ume Ko and they live happy ever after. Tsuru Aoki is Ume Ko. You will like her in the very appealing role she has.

Nearly all the cast are Japanese and this picture is therefore a distinct novelty as well as a pleasant and fantastic little love story. We believe it is the best Hayakawa picture ever produced.

Sessue Hayakawa in a dramatic moment from the Robertson-Cole feature, "The Dragon Painter," released through Exhibitors Mutual

SUGGESTIONS

This feature has several big angles for exploitation. First is the popularity of the star; then comes the unusual story — a romance of Japan with a novel twist in the plot's unfolding. Next is the fact that this picture is scenically wonderful and represents its locale in Japan perfectly. Last is an almost entire Japanese cast, only two persons of the principal players being white.

While we have no authority for saying so, we would be willing to wager that this story was a Japanese legend tbat has been embellished for picture use and therefore we believe you would be safe in asserting that it is such and thereby arouse considerable interest on this point.

You can promise your patrons the most artistic picture Hayawaka has ever presented. Promise them a trip to Japan, for in spite of the fact that the feature was made in California, no one would ever know that it was not made on Japanese soil.

We would give Tsuru Aoki some of our billing, as she is making many friends. Tell your people she has a good part. In fact the role is juite as good as the star's.

CATCH LINES

"I search for my dragon princess," said Tatsu, the mad artist of the mountains.

He was a painter of dragons because for a thousand years he had been searching for his "dragon princess." He found her and tben began a long life of bappiness.

Kano Indara was the greatest painter of dragons in Japan, but he mourned because no son would live after him to perpetuate his art. But Tatsu, the mad artist of the mountains, wooed and won his daughter's hand and in the end he had a son who added fame to his house and brought happiness to his daughter and to him in his declining years.

"WIDOW BY PROXY"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Should Captivate Star's Followers

A VERY amusing and entertaining light comedy offering that should captivate all the star's followers. The cast in support is very good and direction is excellent. Photography and sets are up to par and the sub-titles are clever.

It has a neat love element. Wholesome and full of laughs. Story and continuity contribute the essential suspense.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and entirely pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing: Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 28.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Marguerite Clark comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement begining ——— in her latest Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Widow By Proxy."

This is from the successful stage play by Catherine Chisholm Cushing and Nigel Barrie is Miss Clark's leading man.

As Gloria Grey, she appears as a lively bachelor girl trying in vain to support herself by giving music lessons. She is also trying to provide for a young woman who has lost her soldier husband.

The brother of this same soldier husband has just finished a course of training for the navy and is expecting the call for service any moment. He has never met his brother's wife as the two maiden aunts were very proud of their family tree and would not receive a former actress lady.

But Lieut. Stevens Pennington wanted to settle all his affairs before he left for the other side and felt that his brother Jack's widow should have her share of one piece of property. So the family lawyer sent for her.

When the letter came the two girls were pestered by creditors as Gloria Grey was too honest with her pupils to be financially successful as a music teacher. The widowed girl was too proud to accept the invitation however and felt that as the two aunts had not recognized her when Jack was alive she should not accept anything from them now.

So Gloria persuades her to allow her to act as Jack's widow by proxy inasmuch as they had never seen her. And the real widow accompanies her as her companion. When she completely wins the two aunts she also wins the love of the brother and he proposes.

Then the supposedly dead soldier makes an appearance in person and government reports to the contrary he was very much alive. The complications came thick and fast until the final denoument. This is heralded as one of the best comedies the little star has had in a long time.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture your first thought should be just to get a line in every available place that "Marguerite Clark will appear at ——— theatre in her latest Paramount-Artcraft Picture, 'Widow By Proxy'." The star's following will then be assured for you. And the brand is well advertised and may bring in many others. The title is captivating in itself. Therefore this one line capitalizes in three very effective ways and should be displayed everywhere possible.

If you are strong for special stunts you can send out a handsome girl in attractive widow attire. Get a striktng woman but by all means do not have a placard or anything suggestive of the theatre about her. If you can have her drive a car and break a few traffic rules without accident you have staged a publicity stunt that will be very effective. Especially if you can arrange an arrest and have her confess that she is only a widow by proxy.

Marguerite Clark in the Paramount feature "Widow by Proxy"

PROGRAM READER

And she looked so cute in her widow's tweeds.

But she was only a widow by proxy. A sort of a fake widow.

She was courted just as fervently as most attractive young widows are.

Cupid was a merciless little devil and shot both ways for Sunday.

And the widow by proxy did not know which way to turn.

The climax came when her "husband" returned from France contrary to all government reports which had him dead and buried.

Aren't husbands the most contrary things?

Marguerite Clark portrays the role of an unsuccessful music teacher. She was a good little teacher but her financial success was nil. She was too honest with her pupils.

If they had poor voices she told them so frankly. This is against the code of ethics of some teachers, it is said.

Therefore she became a widow by proxy and this eventually brought her wealth and also a nice looking young husband thrown in for good measure.

"Widow By Proxy" is a Paramount-Artcraft Picture coming to this theatre next week.

CATCH LINES

She contributed the widow's mite in the sea of romance but she was only a widow by proxy.

A whirly girly widow without the Reno embellishments. A heart smasher in sombre array.

One girlish widow wins all the apples from the family tree and then gathers the big plum in the orchard.

A little widow is a mighty dangerous thing said a certain wise man.—But who ever took a warning?

Just as she was accepting him, her "husband" returned. Aren't some husbands the perfect bores?

Brentwood Negotiating for Author-Director

L. C. Haynes, President of the Brentwood, has advised Robertson-Cole Company of his recent purchase of two especially suitable stories for picturization with ZaSu Pitts in the leading role. One is a story by Burke Jenkins from which a particularly sympathetic scenario has been prepared by Sarah Y. Mason. The other, an original by Claude H. Mitchell, son of the late Edmund Mitchell, is now in the hands of the continuity writers. Both of these stories are said to admirably sustain the established aims and ideals of the Brentwood.

It is further stated that the Brentwood is negotiating with an author-director of international reputation for the commencement of a production of a series of special pictures as soon as the necessary stage and equipment facilities can be added to the improvements which were planned when the studio property they formerly rented was purchased outright by the Brentwood last month.

New Century Comedy

"Romeo and Jolly Juliets" is the title of a comedy subject now under production by the Century Comedies Company, in which a sly, old farmer lets the farm go to blazes when a number of camp-fire girls disport themselves in a swimming hole near his farm. With all sorts of ingenious devices the sly old reprobate admires the landscape and incidentally the charming swimmers and his wife, naturally, is hot and heavy on his trail. Wm. H. Watson is directing the picture and Cliff Bowes and Merta Sterling have the leads. The Century Bathing Girls take the parts of the campfire beauties.

Three Players Suffer in Fight Scene

After the fight was over William Russell, Fox Film star, went to the dentist; Director Harry Millarde applied some raw meat to his bleeding eye and Agnes Ayres visited a drug store for some arnica for a badly bruised shin, but the director got realism for the motion picture screen.

The cause of it all was an episode in producing the new Fox feature, "Sacred Silence," which has in it a vicious fight between the hero and a big burly truck driver.

German Market Closed to Us

Film Producers There Afraid of Competition Is Report; in Unhealthy Shape

J. C. BARNSTYN, in charge of the New York office of the British and Continental Trading Company of The Hague, Holland, gives out an interesting report of German film conditions as set forth by a representative of his firm who has just visited Berlin. Most German buyers, he writes, have no knowledge whatever of what is being done by American producing firms, excepting those who imported films before the war.

Not ten buyers in the whole of Germany appear to be well posted on Charles Chaplin, and to emphasize how little they know about this, the traveler stated that he had an inquiry from one buyer, for "dramas" featuring that comedian.

There are only four or five exchanges in Germany, the U. F. A. included, that are of any importance. There are many additional exchanges but they are smaller firms, buying one or two features a year, and few of them strictly reliable. As a matter of fact the general condition of the German market, he says, is unsettled and unreliable.

The German producers are making —just as they did during the war— "star series" and the buyers and exchanges, as well as exhibitor, are forced to close the entire series, otherwise they cannot procure any of the desired films.

The German producers, he declares, fearing competition from foreign buyers, have exerted their influence with the Government to continue the embargo on the importation of films, and they are working to have films permanently classified as articles of luxury, which are all "verboten" for importation.

They also have forced their customers to close for their entire output until the end of 1921, and it is for this reason that many of the film buyers are thoroughly "booked up" to the end of 1921.

Mr. Barnstyn believes that in view of this situation and in view of the rumors in Berlin that the German Government is making efforts to place a loan in America for the sum of twenty-five million dollars, American producers and film exporters ought to cooperate and bring to the attention of the United States Government the above situation in regard to film exporters. In the event that a German loan should actually be placed here, he says, the conditions should provide that films not be classified as luxuries, but as the essential they are.

First of Special Vitagraphs

"Vengeance of Durand," Initial Film, Based on Stories of Famous Authors

VITAGRAPH has selected "The Vengeance of Durand," by Rex Beach, as the film to inaugurate its series of twelve plays by twelve of America's most distinguished authors. It will be shown in November, and thereafter the others of the series, comprising the works of Robert W. Chambers, Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Irvin S. Cobb, Booth Tarkington, Richard Harding Davis, O. Henry, George Ade, Gouverneur Morris, Amelia Rives and George Randolph Chester, will be released at the rate of one a month, the entire series covering a period of a year.

Vitagraph's feature stars will appear in them. Coincident with them Vitagraph will produce a similar series of other super-features, each one, however, based on a notable stage play.

Alice Joyce will have the leading role in "The Vengeance of Durand," which gives her one of the strongest parts in her enviable career. As Marion Durand, and later as Beatrice Durand, she plays the roles of both the wife of Henri Durand and their daughter. It is not a dual role or double personality. The mother dies by her own hand; the daughter grows up and becomes the central figure in the intense story.

"The Vengeance of Durand" is a story of unreasonable jealousy, carried to madness, and cunningly planned vengeance. It is entirely modern, although Mr. Beach very cleverly has introduced a garden fete, which not only permits the use of period costumes, but lends itself to beautiful sets and scenes which seldom have been equalled on the screen. The locale of "The Vengeance of Durand" is in France.

Selznick's Son Assistant Studio Manager

Howard Selznick, one of the sons of Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, has been appointed assistant to Frank J. Hampton, studio manager of the Selznick Fort Lee studios.

Many Animal Species in "Wapi" Film

Sixteen varieties of wild animals, each with an active, important role to play, comprise a unique feature of the cast for "Back to God's Country," the Curwood-Carver production adapted from "Wapi, The Walrus," the dog story by James Oliver Curwood, and which was released on September 29 by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Beginning with Wapi, a Great Dane of remarkable size, strength and ferocity, and whose exploits as a Killer have been made familiar to hundreds of thousand of magazines readers by the series of stories written about him by Mr. Curwood and published in Good Housekeeping and other national publications, the representatives of the animal kingdom include a pair of mountain lions, wolves, lynx, fox, deer, bears, raccoons, wild cats, and two pugilistic cubs a few weeks old.

"Topics of Day" Taken

The new Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, operated by the same interests as the original Strand in New York City, has followed the example of the parent theatre and booked "Topics of the Day," the popular screen program of timely and witty paragraphs selected from the world's press by The Literary Digest, adapted to the screen by Timely Films, Inc., and distributed by Pathe.

Vitagraph News Bits

PRODUCTION has been begun of the story of the Far East in which Earle Williams is playing under the direction of Chester Bennett, and the new stage is entirely occupied with some splendid Japanese sets. The working title of the picture is "Somewhere East of Suez."

Director David Smith has completed "Pegeen," latest Bessie Love feature, and is taking a semi-vacation by searching for new screen material for his star.

After having taken a brief rest, Larry Semon is directing and playing the principal role in a new comedy, the title of which has not been selected.

Water stuff for the eighth episode of "Smashing Barriers" was filmed by William Duncan during the week in which besides the barriers, a practically new limousine was smashed.

The third episode of the "Secret Service Serial," in which Antonio Moreno plays the leading role, is being completed with the taking of scenes on a mountain location.

Under the direction of Noel Smith, Jimmy Aubrey, Babe Hardy and Jack Smith are half-way through the second of their tenement house comedies, and it is expected it will be completed within a week.

Harry Mann has finished the first of his "Simple Harry" series of two-reel comedies, and the second is being begun.

Fox Studio Doings

PRODUCTION by four dramatic units has been underway during the week at the William Fox studios, and vehicles for Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, Madlaine Traverse and Gladys Brockwell are being prepared for their first scenes.

Bertram Bracken, who directed National's "The Confesion"

Statuesque Madleine Traverse, star in the Fox production of "The Splendid Sin" explaining the camera's mysteries to Jonathan and Frank, the two sons of Secretary of the Navy Daniels

Frank Beal is finishing the direction of "The Devil's Riddle," with Gladys Brockwell, and soon will begin production of a light drama featuring the Ray-Fair combination.

A story by H. H. Van Loan called "The Last Night," in which she plays five different characters, will be Miss Brockwell's next production. It is a drama of Parisian society based on the period before the war.

With Madlaine Traverse as the star, Scott Dunlap, who has completed a series of successful comedy-dramas with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, will begin production of a South Sea Island story. Both the director and his star, it is said, have a bigger theme than anything either of them has undertaken previously.

Peggy Hyland is nearing the final scenes of "A Girl in Bohemia," which Howard M. Mitchell is directing. Her next story has not been selected.

Production of William Fox Sunshine Comedies, of which Hampton Del Ruth is supervising director, continues with the same organizations at work on two-reel subjects. The first to be completed of these will be the beach story being staged by Director Edward Cline.

At the Ince Plant

SPECTACULAR scenes of a session of soldiers and workmen at the Russian duma, were staged by Director Fred Niblo for the big production of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism." An exact replica of the Chamber at Petrograd was constructed, and seven hundred extras were employed.

Charles Ray has begun work under the direction of Jerome Storm, of a new story, "Paris Green," written by Julien Josephson. The story concerns the adventures of a young man in Paris during the war.

Final scenes have been made of the special Hobart Bosworth feature, "Behind the Door," which is being directed by Irvin Willat. A water explosion was among the last to be made, and more or less damage to properties and other studio furnishings was caused by an overcharge of black powder.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May, Ince co-stars, are half-way in their production of "Mary's Ankle," under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

The latest Enid Bennett feature has been begun at Culver City under the direction of Fred Niblo. It is from a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "The Woman in the Suitcase."

About Metro Players

HAVING completed practically at the same time their principal productions, "Lombardi, Ltd.," "Fair and Warmer" and "Please Get Married," the Metro studios have put underway a new series of vehicles for Bert Lytell, May Allison and Viola Dana, and the all-star casts which will be engaged in the filming of Drury Lane melodramas.

Production is about to be begun on "The Walk-Offs," the fourth Oliver Morosco stage success bought by Metro, as a feature in which May Allison will star. It is to be directed by Herbert Blache from the play by the Hattons, adapted for the screen by June Mathis and A. P. Younger. Darrell Foss has been engaged for Miss Allison's support.

The next Viola Dana vehicle is to be "The Willow Tree," a Japanese fantasy which will be directed by Henry Otto.

Production is well on its way of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Best of Luck," which is being made for Screen Classics under the direction of Ray Smallwood, with Kathryn Adams prominent in the all-star cast.

The original story by Finis Fox, "Should a Woman Tell," also was placed under production, the first scenes having been made this week.

Jack Dillon is directing Bert Lytell in "The Right-of-Way," the famous story of the Canadian Northwest by Sir Gilbert Parker.

Because of the necessity for experimentation with storm effects being carried out by Director John Ince, Cameraman Sol Polito and Technical Director Amos Myers, the opening scenes of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the noted drama by Thomas Hardy, has been postponed.

Universal Newsettes

SEVERAL feature productions are nearing completion, and new features have been placed underway during the week at Universal City. Priscilla Dean has begun work on "The Virgin of Stamboul," under the direction of Tod Browning. The story is by H. H. Van Loan, and the script by William Parker.

Dorothy Phillips, star in "Ambition," has returned from location at Pleasanton, near San Francisco, Cal., with her director, Allen Holubar.

Closing scenes for "The Beach Comber," Elmo Lincoln's photodrama of Central America, are being filmed at Laguna Beach near Los Angeles. The production is being directed by Rex Ingram.

Tsuru Aoki will finish filming "The Breath of the Gods" this week, and

Alice Brady is starred in "Sinners" her first Realart production

Three tense moments from the Jewell-Universal production, "Blind Husbands," starring Eric Von Stroheim, who is also author and director of the feautre will shortly after begin production on a feature tentatively called "The Yellow Orchid." Rollin S. Sturgeon is directing.

Al Santell is well started on a Universal comedy called "Hot Tamale."

The exclusive residential section of Pasadena is being used for scenes of "The Pointing Finger," Mary MacLaren's latest production being directed by Eddie Jull.

The fourth episode of "The Lion Man," a serial filmed from "The Strange Case of Cavendish," has been completed with Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin starring.

Cast for "The Pedlar of Lies" is very nearly completed. The story was written by Henry C. Rowland. Frank Mayo portrays the title role, while Ora Carew plays opposite him. Ray Ripley and Dagmar Godowsky have prominent roles. William C. Dowlan is the director.

Director Norman Dawn has returned from the cattle country where the stampede scenes for "Lasca" were made. A few more interior scenes will see the picture completed. The featured players are Frank Mayo, Edith Roberts and Veola Harty.

Florence Turner has finished her latest Universal comedy, "The Health Farm," in which she is assisted by Hal Wilson and Lester Marsh.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have finished "Small Town Stuff," and are ready to start on a new mirth-provoker being written by C. B. Hoadley.

Francelia Billington, Barney Sherry and Gloria Hope will have the leading roles in "The Day She Paid," a forthcoming Universal feature based on a magazine story by Fanny Hurst.

Anita Stewart in a moment from the First National feature "Her Kingdom of Dreams"

Here and There

WORD from Steamboat Springs, Colo., reflects recent activities of the Art-O-Graf Studio at that place under the supervision of Otis B. Thayer, president and director of the company. The company is completing its picture, "The Last of the Open Range" and Mr. Thayer soon will leave for Chicago with the finished film. First prints of the company's initial production of "The Wolves in Wall Street" has been shipped to its Eastern distributors after having received favorable comment at a preview. On the return of Mr. Thayer from the East work will be begun on a thirty-two reel serial.

The latest Mitchell Lewis production, for which five weeks were spent on location in Oregon and the California mountains, has been completed, and has been given the name of "The Last of His People." It was directed by Robert Bradbury, and in it Lewis portrays the character of a chief of a vanished tribe. Catherine Van Buren is his leading woman.

Production of a new series of Holly Comedies in which Sid Smith will be starred under the direction of Robert P. Kerr, has been begun at the new Bull's Eye Studio at Santa Monica Boulevard. The pictures which will be based on comedy situations rather than slapstick effects, will be in one-reel releases begun November 1, and will form a series of twenty-six.

Gale Henry has begun a new series of two-reel comedies, the first of which has been given a Metropolitan location especially adapted, it is said, to her elongated form of humor.

Twenty art titles representing forty actual working days have been made for the "Sunset-Burrud Legends of the Wilderness," which are being filmed in the Northwest and Canadian Rockies, by L. J. Burrud for the Bull's Eye program. The titles were painted by Herbert V. B. Acker, and are said to be among the finest of their kind. The first of the releases will be the "Lake of Living Waters," in which Crater Lake, Oregon, was filmed.

Two notable stage successes have been secured as a result of the amalgamation of interests of the Shuberts, Selwyn and Al H. Woods with the Goldwyn organization. These are "The Woman in Room Thirteen" and "Roads of Destiny," both of which will be screened with Pauline Frederick in the star role.

"Roads of Destiny" was written by Channing Pollock from the story by O. Henry, while "The Woman in Room Thirteen" is by Percival Wilde, Max Marcin and Samuel Shipman.

Director Victor Schertzinger, his star, Mabel Normand, and their company, have gone on location to Victorville for the first scenes of the new Mabel Normand vehicle started this week.

Another company on location is that which is making "The Street Called Straight" from the story by Basil King, of which direction is by Wallace Worsley.

Pauline Fredericks is well into the scenes of her new picture being directed by William Parke, the name of which has not been selected.

Director Clarence Badger is filming another of the Billy Fortune stories by William R. Lighton with Will Rogers.

Eugene Mullen, formerly scenario editor at Universal City, has joined the Goldwyn editorial staff, and will cooperate with Thompson Buchanan under the supervision of J. G. Hawks.

Exterior scenes of shipping episodes are being made by T. Hayes Hunter directing the Eminent Authors' Production of Rupert Hughes' story, "The Cup of Fury." The company is at San Pedro, where a big explosion will be staged. Helene Chadwick and Rockcliffe Fellows are the leading players with Florence Deshon and Herbert Standing prominent in the cast.

With six companies working at top speed and arrangements made for a seventh, which will begin production upon the arrival from the East of a new director, the National studios are buzzing with activity. Under the direction of Bertram Bracken, an all-star cast, headed by Francis McDonald, is at work in "The Kentucky Colonel," the story by Opie Reid, which was adapted for the screen by Franklyn Hall, head of the scenario department.

The present vehicle for Billie Rhodes, upon which production is well underway, is "Hearts and Masks," which is being directed by William Seiter from Mildred Considine's screen adaptation of Harold MacGrath's novel. Negotiations for the right to a big Broadway success are being made by William Parsons, president of the company, for Miss Rhodes' next production, while a story for an all-star cast with Francis McDonald, also is being arranged for.

Ann Little and Jack Hoxey, co-starring in "Lightning Bryce," are making final scenes of the eighth episode under the direction of Paul Hurst.

Harry Edwards is directing Eddie Flanagan and Neely Edwards in "The Hall Room Boy" Comedies, while Mark Goldaine has charge of production of the new Capitol Comedies, with "Smiling" Billy Parsons featured.

Harry Edwards, directing Eddie Flanagan and Neely Edwards in "The Hall Room Boys" series of two-reel comedies, has started upon the eighth story of the scheduled twenty-six.

Simplex

THERE ARE GEARS AND GEARS AND SIMPLEX GEARS

DIE-CAST GEARS STOCK GEARS and SIMPLEX GEARS

A very important and necessary part of any Projector mechanism is the gear train. A poorly constructed gear generally fails to mesh properly with its engaging member, resulting in—and one poor gear will quickly render the entire gear train equally bad.

QUICK WEAR—RATTLE—AND GRIND

DIE-CAST GEARS

Some machine builders use die-cast gears. These are simply reamed out and pinned on to the shaft. No labor cost here to speak of—but die-cast gears have no place on the modern Projector.

STOCK GEARS

Stock gears are somewhat better, but even these are far from accurate due to the fact that from twelve to fourteen of them are cut on one arbor which springs ever so slightly in the middle causing inaccuracy.

SIMPLEX GEARS

Simplex gears are all cut out, shaped and reamed from the solid stock on screw machines. Then they are taken individually to the small bench lathes where they are smoothed up to proper diameter and angle, and center hole reamed out for perfect fit. Then on to our exclusive gear-hobber or generator where every tooth is perfectly formed through the use of three distinct tools, and finally the gear is smoothed up and drilled ready for pinning on the shaft.

EVERY SIMPLEX GEAR IS INDIVIDUALLY HANDLED AND INVOLVES FROM 80 TO 120 MINUTES IN THE MAKING.

This is only one reason why we have yet to see the first completely worn out Simplex come back to the factory.

Established 1910

This establishment occupies nearly an entire block on Diversey Parkway, a short distance west of Lincoln Park and Lake Michigan. We have 173 feet frontage on Diversey Parkway and 125 feet frontage on Ward Street.

Our building, two floors, is of reinforced concrete; all the office furniture is of steel with mahogany finish; the fittings are made of steel, brass and plate glass; special paint on all walls and coves at ceiling, floors, and corners, prevents dust accumulation.

Every room is equipped with automatic fire sprinklers and a large number of fire extinguishers. Water for the sprinklers is stored in an 18,000 gallon tank on the roof.

Our film vault is a reinforced safe, complete with adequate air cushions, sprinklers, and unit compartments.

The air throughout the entire building is thoroughly washed and automatically governed as to the humidity and temperature.

The departments have been laid out scientifically on a plan that makes for the highest degree of efficiency. Each department is completely equipped in every detail with proper provisions made for the safety and comfort of the employees.

Every element of the work from start to finish is done by our operatives who are properly organized, scientifically managed, and under the personal supervision of executives who understand that upon the entire and lasting satisfaction of the customer depends the definite success and growth of our institution.

Words will not do justice to what we have here to show you so we invite you to come and see for yourself.

Reg. U. S. Patent Office

"Motion Picture News" in its new and improved form is attracting favorable attention from every exhibitor in New Orleans." J. Eugene Pearce, general manager of five theatres, thinks it "the best he ever saw and fills every requirement."

Others who think likewise and express it just as forcibly include Publicity Director Grandjean, of Saenger Amusement Company, and A. Harrison, Jr., president and general manager of the Harcel Film Company, Inc. The latter said: "If all producers would follow where Motion Picture News leads it would be a whole lot better for all of us."

Let your customers Look and Listen

WHILE your patrons are looking at the pictures their ears are doing nothing. Music adds a lot to the enjoyment of pictures. Even the spoken drama needs music to help out the effects—"incidental music" as it is called—and bridge the gaps between the acts.

You know that already.

But do you know that a pipe organ is the best instrument for a picture theatre? That it almost exactly reproduces a full orchestra, without the payroll that an orchestra makes necessary?

Do you know that the Estey Theatre Organ is specially adapted to your needs, that it is made to order to fit a theatre, that it is made by the oldest and best known organ house in the country?

If you are interested, we will send a man to look at your theatre, without cost to you.

Down—But Not Out

¶ Motion Picture News comes to its readers this week with a manner that is in a way an apology.

Due to the unsettled conditions in the printing trade in New York and the shifting currents of labor talk, all publications printed in the metropolitan district several days ago definitely abandoned all hope of issuing their regular editions this week—and possibly for some weeks to come.

The situation is unprecedented.

Naturally, it caused Motion Picture News considerable concern to face the prospect of an abrupt break in its service to exhibitors and the industry at large. The film industry is built on last minute service; it requires and demands a continuous and uninterrupted dissemination of news and service information.

The exhibitor who is not kept posted on the latest releases, through services and Plan Book aid, who does not receive the last minute news, is thrown in the dark. The manufacturer who is unable to make known his plans for coming productions is seriously handicapped.

The moment is an emergency one; the present edition of Motion Picture News is an emergency issue. Every possible effort has been made to prepare and print as many pages of news, reviews and Plan Book service as could be issued before the strike conditons tied our hands completely.

Only such advertising is carried as came to us already printed and in shape for binding.

¶ For Motion Picture News as it comes to you, therefore, we tender an apology. Its slim size, its lack of the all-around complete service that Motion Picture News usually brings to its readers, are sincerely regretted.

But we have done our best. And we offer you—with the little amount of pride to which we are justified—our best possible effort under the circumstances to serve you.

It is a situation such as the present that emphasizes the value of the "all-around" trade paper in the motion picture field.

The current issue of Motion Picture News presents fully as much value as was once considered entirely sufficient for a picture trade paper. Even more—in so far as The Complete Plan Book is concerned.

Think back a few years. And then glance at this issue of Motion Picture News. There is little difference between the copy before you and the accepted trade paper before Motion Picture News showed the way to "all-around" complete Service.

What is principally lacking this week?

The Exhibitors Service Bureau—a Motion Picture News innovation—and to-day the most popular visitor that comes to the box-offices of the country.

Then there are the breezy feature articles discussing problems of the field; the projection service, with its needed technical information; the Music Cue service; the Exhibitors Own Box-Office Reports; the "Fiction Mart," with its valuable aid to the producer; the Special Service Sections; the territorail sub-editions, The Central States and The West Coast.

So we ask you, as you go over the pages of this slim issue, to consider the strides the picture trade press has taken in a few short years and the part that Motion Picture News has played in this advancement by living true to the slogan—"First—at all times. First in evey test and first by every test."

Time Flies

Got to talk fast these days.

Must say a lot in a few words.

Here's another one on Paramount-Artcraft policies.

Production policy this time.

Simple enough at that.

The public demands really high-class pictures.

The exhibitor who refuses to supply them is committing business suicide.

Quality in production is an expensive thing.

Paramount-Artcraft producers spend every cent necessary to make RIGHT pictures.

Directors are not forced to make pictures they do not believe in.

But they must stand on their finished product. No alibis.

They have no time limit and no financial restrictions.

They have carte blanche and MUST produce results.

From the exhibitor must come the cost of these productions, plus a reasonable profit.

From the public the exhibitor must collect HIS costs also plus a reasonable profit.

And the public is WILLING, EAGER to pay real money to see REAL pictures.

Finally the public is rapidly approaching the point where it won't pay a plugged nickel to see poor pictures.

That's the whole story of Paramount-Artcraft production policy.

It's the history of the past. The promise of the future.

Better pictures at better prices.

Augmented attendance at increased admissions.

AND a satisfied, SUPPORTING patronage.

And There's the Evidence!

AS good as a confession of the murder - and yet - there's a flaw in it somewhere. Who's the murderer then - if not the rich man's widow and her accomplice lover? His ward, who inherits? Paul Sernine, who inherits also? Or might it not have been Arsene Lupin himself?

Here's the greatest mystery picture ever filmed - filled with breath-taking suspense, thrilling climaxes and constant inspiration toward guessing the wrong answer. It'll hold your audiences spell-bound!

They're Looking for Mystery!

THE most successful stage plays of the season are murder mystery plays. For some reason it's the popular fancy to crowd to the doors the melodramatic mystery shows.

Well then - here's where they crowd your doors! For there never was a better murder - detective - mystery - melodrama than this great Arsene Lupin story. It'll keep your audiences thrilled to the highest pitch of excitement till the very end.

And they'll go and tell their friends not to miss it for love or money.

Live News from the Producers

Pathe Gets Edgar Lewis Output

Will Release Specials of Red-Blooded Character

EDGAR LEWIS, far-famed for his creation of red-blooded, vigorous dramas, with human heart interest, has been added to the rapidly growing list of noted Pathe producers. As head of the Edgar Lewis Productions, Inc., Mr. Lewis has contracted to produce for Pathe a minimum of four big special features a year,—as in "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sign Invincible." Mr. Lewis will depend largely on a smashing story, and a highly competent cast of players to make his productions noteworthy.

Associated with Mr. Lewis in the formation of his own company, is Harry Cahane, who is also interested in the Albert Capellani and Edwin Carewe organizations.

The announcement coming from Pathe this week regarding the signing of its contract with Mr. Lewis, sets at rest all rumors to the effect that the director was to be aligned with any other distributing concern.

Mr. Lewis will signalize his entrance into the big Pathe family with a production of Andrew Soutar's novel. "Other Men's Shoes." This is the type of outdoor story that Mr. Lewis has come to be associated with.

The producer only recently returned from Japan, where he went to collect numerous shots of pictorial splendor which he will use in a production he has contemplated for some months.

At present, Mr. Lewis is engaged in selecting his cast for "Other Men's Shoes." He has completed all production details, and will direct the interior for the new feature in the Solax Studio. Great care is being exercised for Mr. Lewis in the selection of his players, for without a highly competent cast it would be most difficult to make the finest type of production from "Other Men's Shoes," which is a tense, dramatic recital full of human nature.

Mr. Lewis is one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, and has been actor and director almost from the inception of the cinema in this country.

Mr. Lewis is considered a distinct asset to the Pathe feature producers' list. Among the pictures which he has turned out are "Northern Lights," "The Fires of Johannis," "Those Who Toil," "The Light at Dusk," "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister," "The Sign Invincible" and "Calibre 38."

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, is most enthusiastic over the signing of Mr. Lewis. "The exhibitor is the man who led me to bring Mr. Lewis into the Pathe fold," said Mr. Brunet after the signing of the contract. Never in his career has Mr. Lewis made a picture that was not a big box office winner. That is because he makes pictures the public wants—pictures with a story, a touch that reaches the heart, and one that brings a smile to wipe away each tear.

"Since I first saw 'The Barrier' I have wished that Edgar Lewis could produce for Pathe. Now that my wishes have been fulfilled, I am certain that Pathe will have other 'Barriers' to give exhibitors."

Pictures Not Affected by Unrest

Larger Robertson-Cole Bookings Would So Indicate

WITH the theatrical season fairly begun and the early Autumn motion picture releases under way the outstanding fact, according to an official of Robertson-Cole Company, is that whatever else may be affected by the general unrest and the strike condition, the motion picture industry has not been injured in the slightest. In fact, a decided increase in business is reported from all sections of the country, and it would seem that with all the turmoil people are turning to the motion picture as the favorite means of enjoyment and relaxation.

Realizing the unusual conditions of this Autumn, this official of the Robertson-Cole organization undertook a month ago to obtain the best available information on the situation throughout the country. The reports which are now coming in rapidly all showed increased bookings for the Robertson-Cole offerings distributed by Exhibitors'-Mutual, and established the significant fact that exhibitors have met with an astonishing increase in the number of motion picture patrons.

"Right in many of the strike centers the largest gains in percentage of attendance have been shown," said the official who made the investigation, "and it is evident that under present conditions people under mental stress will turn to the theatre, and particularly to the motion picture theatre, for the necessary diversion. The establishing of this fact should be hailed with the greatest satisfaction by every one in the industry, for it indicates that we will probably be spared much of the distress which prevailing industrial conditions will create for others.

"It was the belief of Robertson-Cole that this situation would prevail in the industry, that despite all else motion pictures would continue in great popular favor. We arranged our Fall and early Winter campaign of pictures to be distributed by Exhibitors-Mutual on that basis; but, of course, that was no guarantee that we were right, so we very naturally kept the necessary lines out to gauge the situation when the normal theatrical situation got under way.

"We have at all times followed the policy of keeping in close touch with the exhibitors, and in addition to the regular sources our traveling representatives have been active in meeting them and in obtaining definite information of conditions in each locality. This, of course, enabled us to get a quick and still comprehensive understanding of the situation when it was required. That understanding is highly gratifying to Robertson-Cole, and should be to all in the business.

"The information we have received brings a warm endorsement of the high character of the offerings thus far released. We announced that every picture released would have to meet a certain high standard, and failure to meet that standard would mean that a production would not go on the market from the office of Robertson-Cole.

"I do not think producers should believe that the general increase in bookings and business in the houses should be taken to mean that the public is looking for entertainment and will take anything.

Katterjohn Comes East on Big Picture

Monte M. Katterjohn has been called suddenly to New York, where he will conclude final arrangements with a group of Eastern financiers for the filming of his big Alaskan play, based on his book, "Hearts of the Stampede."

It is Katterjohn's intention to make this production the real living epic of the far northland—an historical pageant of stampede days. He states that "Hearts of the Stampede" will be much more elaborate than either of his former Alaskan screen plays, "The Flame of the Yukon" or "Carmen of the Klondike."

More than $250,000 will be expended on the production. Within twelve hours after receiving a wire to come to New York and make final arrangements for producing the Alaskan spectacle, Katterjohn had disposed of his interests in "Love, Honor and Obey" and the Katterjohn productions to Harry Garson, who also manages the Clara Kimball Young pictures, and was en route for the Eastern metropolis.

Initial Paramount Al St. John Comedy

The first of the Paramount-Al St. John Comedies, "Speed," is nearing completion at the St. John Studio at Glendale, Cal., it was learned at the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "Speed" is written and personally directed by Mr. St. John who is said to be, under his new contract, one of the highest salaried comedians on the screen today.

Priscilla Dean on Big Feature

"Beautiful Beggar" Is First Under New "U" Contract

THE big event of the week at Universal City was the start of Priscilla Dean on the first special production on her new Universal contract.

"The Beautiful Beggar" is the title of the eight-reel feature which marks the return of this well-known star to the screen after an absence of six months. The story was written by H. H. Van Loan, and is under the direction of Tod Browning.

"The Beautiful Beggar" will cost over $250,000 to film, it is announced. The entire action of the picture takes place in Turkey, and the Universal technical department has constructed a number of colossal street sets and mosques for the production. Miss Dean's supporting cast includes Wheeler Oakman, Wallace Beery, E. A. Warren and Ed Burns.

Monroe Salisbury's new production, "The Phantom Melody," is well under way under the direction of Douglas Gerrard. Both the story and scenario were written by F. McGrew Willis. An exceptional cast is seen in this new Universal subject, and includes Barney Sherry, Ray Gallagher, Charles West, Jean Calhoun, Joe Ray and Milton Markwell.

Adapted from the noted poem from the pen of Frank Duprez, by Percy Heath, the film version of "Lasca" has been completed under the direction of Norman Dawn. Frank Mayo and Edith Roberts have the leading roles.

This week also marked the completion of the new Elmo Lincoln feature, "The Beach Comber," under the direction of Rex Ingram. It was written by J. G. Hawks, author of many William S. Hart stories.

Eric Stroheim's newest production, "The Woman in the Plot," is well under way with an all-star cast, including Sam DeGrasse, Clyde Fillmore, Una Trevelun Maude George, Leo White and Mae Busch.

Dorothy Phillips and her director, Allen Holubar, have been doing some creditable work on their latest feature, "Ambition," which was written by Holubar in collaboration with Olga Linek Scholl.

Holubar has surrounded Miss Phillips with a cast including Robert Andersen, Rudolf Valentino, Elinor Field, Emily Chichester, Mary Wise, William Ellingford, Mrs. Margaret Mann and William von Hardenburg.

Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Hayakawa) is in the middle of her first Universal feature, "The Breath of the Gods," by Randall Parrish. Rollin Sturgeon is directing.

The Harry Carey company, under the direction of Jack Ford, is still in Victorville, Cal., filming scenes for "The Gift of the Desert." Winifred Westover plays opposite Carey, with J. Farrell McDonald, Joe Harris, Ted Brook and Charles LeMoyne in the supporting cast.

Several scenes for "The Pointing Finger," Mary MacLaren's newest vehicle, were filmed in the famous Wrigley mansion in Pasadena, California's city of millionaires. David Butler is again seen opposite Miss MacLaren.

"The Lion Man" serial, starring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin, is now in the fifth episode, under the direction of Al Russell. Universal has engaged a stroing cast for this serial, the principal players being Barney Sherry, Robert Walker, Henry Barrows, Gertrude Astor, James Farley, Phil Gastrock, Leonard Clapham and Slim Pagett.

Print Strike Will Not Affect Hodkinson

No exhibitors of the productions released through the W. W. Hodkinson organization will be inconvenienced or deprived of any printed accessories by the strike of New York printers, should the strike develop as now seems likely. Since the first reports of a strike the supply department and the publicity department of the Hodkinson organization, which produce the accessories and printed press sheets and exploitation aids for pictures, have been at work to get complete lines of accessories made and shipped before the inauguration of the strike.

With the strike now at hand announcement is made to exhibitors that accessories on all the productions released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation up and well into December have been completed and sent to the branches.

Pathe Acquires Juanita Hansen, Serial Star

Juanita Hansen, popular leading woman who has long been favorably identified with serial productions, will be starred in a "continued-next-week" photo-drama to be known as "The Red Snows," the first of a series of productions with Miss Hansen in the leading feminine roles, to be published through Pathe, and for which final negotiations were closed through Don Meaney, representing the coast star, and who has been in New York several days.

Miss Hansen, who is at present engaged in serial work, will not finish until late in December. Exteriors for "The Red Snows," which are to be made in the Maine woods, will commence operation about the first of January.

Bosworth to Direct "The Oath" Next

Hobart Bosworth has just completed work on the big Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount-Artcraft, "Behind the Door," which is based on the story by Gouverneur Morris and was produced under the direction of Irvin Willat, and starts this week on a new picture from a story by Luther Reed, a well-known writer on the Ince scenario staff. The title of the production is "The Oath."

Jack Norworth's Serial

Rapid progress on the early episodes of the Wharton serial, "The Crooked Dagger," starring Jack Norworth, is reported by Frederick Chapin of the Scenario Department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who returned yesterday after ten days' supervision work at the Wharton Studio in Ithaca, N. Y. The scenario was written by Mr. Chapin and the serial is to be released by Pathe.

Splendid Direction. A Beautiful Star:
DORIS KENYON

Melodrama, with the right kind of love story, with suspense, action, mystery and tenseness, is always popular. Only the most skilled authors, players and directors know the magic mixture of the right kind of melodrama.

"The Bandbox" is fast, rushing, thrilling melodrama at its finest and best.

A priceless collar of pearls with soft flesh tints like the skin of a beautiful woman. The famous Cadogan collar. Smuggled into America—and stolen!

Two swift, mysterious little men—alike to the fraction of an inch; to the twitch of an eye-brow. William H. Iff, the suspect, and Ismay, the thief.

Alison Landis, a beautiful actress and smuggler. Elcanor Searle, a singer and unintentional accomplice—younger and even more beautiful.

Two lovers, a playwright and wealthy idler; a manager. Customs officers; an island hiding-place; baffling, mixed identities.

And two pink and white striped bandboxes containing Parisian creations, in the lining of one of which rested trouble and happiness.

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Deitrich-Beck, Inc., the producing organization, covers the identities of Theodore C. Deitrich and Arthur F. Beck, two young men who determined to make but a few pictures annually, and to make them very well.

R. William Neill, with an established reputation for dramatic and directorial power, has doubled his reputation with this one production.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the distributor, can look the exhibitor squarely in the eyes, having established and maintained its reputation with big pictures like this one.

Blackton's "Moonshine Trail" on Oct. 19

Announcement is made this week from the Pathe office, that the initial feature of the J. Stuart Blackton series, "The Moonshine Trail," will be released as a six-reel subject, heading the program for the week of October 19.

Sylvia Breamer, who has starred in a number of Blackton features, appears with Robert Gordon in the initial Blackton-Pathe release.

A large and well-known cast support Miss Breamer and Mr. Gordon in "The Moonshine Trail." Although the production will not be released for three weeks, the bookings are extremely heavy on the Blackton feature, indicating that showmen are counting upon the past merit of the Commodore's attractions as assurance for other big box office winners.

Women Best Scenario Writers, 'Tis Said

A new field for clever women is offered by the motion picture industry. Stories suitable for the screen are required by all of the studios and high purchase prices are paid for acceptable matter.

In the writing of scenarios women excel, according to Percy Heath, script editor at Universal City. Mr. Heath says that the feminine mind devises more brilliant plots than the male writer and that the work of a trained woman scenarist is usually better than that of a trained male writer.

"The amateur writer," Mr. Heath says, "furnishes the studios with the best material—less stereotyped and frequently brilliant with an absolutely new idea."

Gladys Leslie Starts on New Vitagraph

Vitagraph has completed the cast for Gladys Leslie's next feature which has the working title of "The Marriage of Little Jeanne Sterling." In addition to Miss Leslie it will include James Morrison, Gladden James, Nellie Spaulding, Roy Applegate and Miss Vallie. "The Marriage of Little Jeanne Sterling" is from the magazine story of the same name by Charles Stokes Wayne, and was picturized by Sam Taylor. William J. Humphrey will direct.

"U" City Closed to Visitors

No Longer Is Tourist's Mecca, Gates Closing Because of Disturbing Element

UNIVERSAL CITY is practically closed to visitors now, and these famous studios, once the mecca of all tourists, are difficult of access except to the occasional person of sufficient importance to receive an invitation. Distinguished persons are always welcome at Universal, and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce can always arrange for the entertainment of important visitors at the big movie plant. Even then it is not always easy to see the picture in the making, for the directors have hit upon the idea of "boxing in" the sets—that is, building a barricade around the action, excluding all who are not employed in the special picture being filmed.

To the tourist arriving in Los Angeles, the first thought always is, "When can I visit Universal City and see the movies made?"

When the big Universal colony was first opened, visitors were permitted and encouraged, and guides were furnished to show them who was who and what was what in the movies. The idea behind this experiment was principally publicity, as it was believed that persons visiting the vast studios would be so enthralled with the immensity of Universal City that they would spread its praises broadcast.

But the experiment proved a failure, for the vast crowds that came daily interfered with the morals of the studios. For to a movie man pictures are a business, the same as banking is to a banker. The huge number of visitors which came to Universal City were not content to watch the action from a reasonable distance, but would crowd on the scene and distract the attention of the directors and players. Many of them were souvenir hunters, and as a result Universal often noticed a loss of little studio articles, in themselves valueless, but of utmost importance to the particular picture in which they were used.

New Rolin Film Comic Series

One Reelers for Pathe Release Will Feature Harry Pollard; Strong Cast

THE Rolin Film Company, producers of the celebrated Harold Lloyd comedies, will inaugurate a new series of one-reel fun-makers for distribution under the Pathe banner, beginning with the issue of "Start Something."

Harry "Snub" Pollard, who had been one of the leading mirth producers in the support of Harold Lloyd, will have the featured role in the new subjects. Hal Roach, president of the Rolin organization, has surrounded Pollard with a choice aggregation of prominent comedy players, and will continue to provide sure-fire support for the popular "Snub."

In the first comedy, Mildred Davis, who because of her beauty and natural talent, is expected to become a prime favorite among lovers of motion pictures, plays opposite Pollard.

Frederick Ernest Morrison, the mirth-making little Senegambian, who has been in comedies with Fatty Arbuckle, and for sometime has been Marie Osborne's little playmate in her two-reel subjects is also in the cast of Pollard's supporting players. He is called the one bright dark spot—"Sunshine Sammy, Prince of Piekaninnies." And to insure his keeping the services of the dusky-hued young comedian, Mr. Roach has tied him up on contract for the entire series of one reelers.

Jack Allen Making Animal Pictures

Major Jack Allen, famous hunter and naturalist, is now writing, directing and starring in one-reel pictures for Universal dealing with wild animal life. Each picture will show life and habits of one certain species of animal, around which an exciting adventure story will be woven with Major Allen as the leading character.

Nature is a religion to Major Allen, and, although having achieved the reputation of a noted hunter, he never wilfully kills an animal if he can avoid it, but traps them alive to add to his already remarkable collection.

Major Allen, who is fifty-one years of age and has a son still with the American army in France, is in better physical condition than many young fellows twenty years old. He attributes his excellent health and vigor to the fact that he loves and lives with nature. He believes that if the overworked human race would live with nature two months in every year there is no reason why man should not live to attain the age of one hundred.

Big Story Purchased for William Farnum

From the office of Fox Film Corporation comes announcement that William Fox, in his exhaustive search for new material for William Farnum, has secured the motion picture rights to one of Victor Bridge's best works, "The Lady from Longacre."

The title of the novel is slightly misleading as a guide to the character of the story—which is declared to be adapted to use by Mr. Farnum.

An impressive production of "The Lady from Longacre" is being planned by Mr. Fox and the expectation is that it will follow "If I Were King," on which Mr. Farnum is now engaged under the skilful direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

Musical Comedy Star with Fairbanks

Miss Kathleen Clifford has been engaged as Douglas Fairbanks' leading lady in his current picture on the United Artist's program. A very flattering offer was made the little artiste of musical comedy.

Greene on Value of Advertising

With Quality Films It Made Demand for Paramounts

NATIONAL advertising is credited with playing a big part in creating a public demand for better motion pictures, and consequently furthering the distribution of the Paramount-Artcraft product, by Walter E. Greene, Vice-President in Charge of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in an article which appears in the current issue of "Pep," the Famous Players-Lasky house organ.

"Not so very long ago we issued an advertisement in which we proudly stated that we were serving 'five thousand satisfied customers' out of a possible total of fifteen thousand theatres in the United tates," says Mr. Greene. "Since that time the aggregate number of theatres in active operation has changed but little and yet a recent analysis made of our business brought to light the fact that during the past eighteen months no less than 11,008 theatres have used either our entire output or some portion of it.

"This clientele represents over two-thirds of the available market and includes practically all of the better-class houses in the country. This tremendous increase in business is ascribable to but one thing, the policy followed by this organization. And when I say policy I mean the policy of quality in production, nationally advertised in such periodicals as the Saturday Evening Post and backed by an exchange service which is as near perfect as we have been able to make it.

"The old saw, 'The proof of the pudding is in the eating,' was never more applicable than here. This steady, continued, healthful growth in business has come to us through perfectly natural causes, The public is being continually reminded of the quality of Paramount Artcraft pictures and there is an insistant demand for them which cannot be ignored? HAS not been ignored by the average exhibitors. And we have supplied the demand we have created with the sort of pictures which were calculated to completely satisfy the patrons of the motion picture theatre and thus make the demand for our product a constant one.

"Exhibitors have prospered through the presentation of our pictures and will prosper to an even greater degree in the future than in the past because we are gradually extending our national advertising and our producers are supplying us with better pictures today than ever before, due to our new production policy of allowing directors an unlimited period for the creation of each subject instead of setting a time limit as has been necessary in the past.

"An important factor in the construction of better pictures has been our policy in the matter of production costs. Directors, once they have signified their belief in their ability to turn out a top-notch picture from any given story, are left entirely on their own in in the matter of costs. They are expected simply to return a picture of a quality commensurate with its cost. Their reputation is behind each picture they make.

"We are looking forward with the greatest optimism to by far the most successful year in the history of our business and we know that it will be a prosperity in which the exhibitor will share equally with the producer and the distributor. The motion picture arrived years ago, but since it was first recognized as one of the greatest forces of the times it has progressed steadily and surely until it is now possible to look ahead with perfect certainty to an assured permanent success.

nowmen Argue Henley's "No Star" Statement

Hobart Henley's views on the acy of the star as a factor in box ce successes have started a discus- n among exhibitors from one coast the other. When Mr. Henley re- tly signed a contract to produce r features a year for Pathe, he quoted in an interview as saying t he was going to give the best ures that could be made for the ple reason that he would have no s to interfere with his own ideas proper direction.

Ir. Henley is standing pat, how- r, and refers all who seek enlight- ent on the subject to "The Gay Dog," his production made from . Sees Million Dollar Film Ahead

Rowland, Metro's Head, Tells of Aims of His Company

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., promises exhibitors and the picture-going public a precise illustration of the "fewer, bigger and better productions" slogan coined by Metro, with the release of "Lombardi, Ltd.," starring Bert Lytell.

"Director General Karger and Director Jack Conway have achieved perfectly, in this production," said the Metro executive, "exactly what we had in mind when we abandoned program pictures for the 'fewer and better' policy. Our intention is to manufacture and place on the market photoplays derived exclusively from outstanding dramatic and comedy successes of the legitimate stage, and from novels by celebrated authors which by their story merit and power have become household books.

"In the former category is 'Lombardi, Ltd.' It is a picturization of the smart comedy of modes of that title by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, which was produced in New York and later throughout this country and Canada by Oliver Morosco.

"The day of the machine made picture is past. The public has turned thumbs down. It has shown that its taste has immeasurably improved, and now demands fewer and better screen productions.

"With our watchword of 'fewer and better' productions as his guide, it is evident from the finished work of 'Lombardi, Ltd.,' that Director General Karger gave the picture the most painstaking and assiduous care. The production is in every detail worthy of a long run. And Metro has been advocating and fighting for the long run consistently for nearly two years.

"'Lombardi, Ltd.,' has triple-sided quality and distinction: story, star and production are each and all of a strength to challenge comparison with the very best work that has ever been presented in motion pictures."

Mr. Rowland, incidentally, stated that in his belief the day of the million dollar photo production is not far distant. He declared he could readily conceive of stories worthy of such an expenditure in order to give them the artistic environment they deserve.

With other Metro officials Mr. Rowland has held staunchly to the belief that, properly presented, a motion picture production is the best and highest form of entertainment in the world, adapted as it is to all classes and conditions of men and women. Metro has always striven to bring the silent drama to a recognized, equal footing with the spoken play, which enjoys runs of six months and a year and longer, enabling its producers to realize substantially upon the capital invested, as well as permitting them to devote more and more time to the preparation of each succeeding new work.

"World Aflame" Is Gripping Film Story Based on Problems of Today

Solution of Industrial Unrest Offered in Timely Picture With Frank Keenan as Star

By Archie Bell.

Frank Keenan

THE cook burned the soup. That doesn't seem a particularly dramatic episode at first thought, but it was the one that proved the nitro glycerin of general discontent and incipient revolution to the boiling point.

The timely problem is involved. The whole thing, called "The World Aflame," with Frank Keenan playing the principal part, is a film about to be made visible locally, and I have no hesitation in declaring that it is one of the biggest things that has reached us via the celluloid route.

In the first place, for as timely as the last edition of the newspaper, generally, its plot might have been taken from the front page of the newspaper any day. Third to be satisfying, though, it makes you think and prompts you to a constructive view as individual powers that be. A refreshing if not wholly unlooked for part of the country and of all the world's ills, and most important of all, the authors of the piece and the actors in it had something to say and they said it well. It wasn't apparently just a case of reading "another play."

There's a distinct message for you and for me.

People are dodging that issue.

CARSON BURR, a rich man living in a luxurious home with his wife, son and daughter, is surrounded by cronies, every one of whom, excepting his valet, who is a man of keen for the development of sentimental and romantic interest in a love affair with the daughter, proves himself intelligent, adds to his performance of duty, in reality stung with the poison of "every man is as good as any other man and perhaps a little better."

The cook burns the soup and when it is returned to the kitchen, smashes up things generally and quits the place, compelling the family to go to a restaurant for dinner.

Here they are served by a smarting, ex-good waiter, who feels that he is ten good for his job and who resents serving his "inferiors."

The family chauffeur, Lorenz, the automobile while they are dining and wants his pal for a game, during which robes are stolen from the machine and he is nowhere to be found when wanted.

Ineffective, no ambition to perform any task the is expected from workers, entirely the wrong attitude of everyone concerned in keeping the wheels of everyday life in motion, drives Burr to the office of the mayor of the city. He announces that he will run in opposition to the incumbent for the position of mayor, his campaign being based entirely upon a promise to give the people a service that they have not been getting and the hysteria of war seemed to settle in the minds of all men.

There is a lively campaign on both sides, the older order of politicians fighting against the man. The race is run and Burr is installed in the chair of the chief executive of the city.

IMMEDIATELY he is pounced upon by all dissatisfied elements because he is a "rich man" and because he is not supposed to be a friend of the laboring class. Even the cook makes violent speeches about how he was "through" with Burr, says he has been in the habit of [illegible] and that he is not going to stand for it any longer.

[illegible] labor's music have a financial interest, impressive scenes. Will protest is what they produce. There must only interest you, but as it is to be a different relationship between employer and employee than there has been in the past. And finally, for the drama's sake, at least, he convinces them that what he says is true. One man admits that he lost $200,000 in a strike at his mine factory. "How much better if you had given that $200,000 among your men," says Burr.

There is a labor meeting in progress. "I'm going there tonight and you're going with me," Burr says to his [illegible] and we are [illegible] the crucial position and interest [illegible] out the six reels that are supposed to [illegible] the story.

Representative labor men and others interested have been invited to attend a review of "The World Aflame," the educative motion picture drama portraying a proposed solution of the industrial problem, tonight in the Colonial Room of the St. Francis Hotel. Frank Keenan, well-known actor and artist in both the author and star of the play which will be presented to the public. Keenan both has he has portrayed a virile and honest hero in the difficulties existing between capital and labor. It is said that a purpose has been spent in producing the film. Keenan has toured the country lecturing before labor unions on his remedy for industrial unrest. SEE MOVIE PLAY, Page 18

James Cairns, film producer and exhibitor, who recently purchased the Kenmore and Pathe Grove theaters from Messrs. Elkins & Lachman, is negotiating with the Pathe Exchange to secure Frank Keenan's great timely picture, "The World Aflame," for a months run in one of the two houses. In all probability it will be shown in the Auditorium.

Mr. Cairns has recently sold his interest in the New Lake Theater and resigned his position as general manager of the American Music Hall Theater Corporation, which owns the lease to that house.

MAYORS OFFICE

Mr. Frank Keenan,
Pathe Exchange, Inc,
San Francisco, Calif.

My Dear Mr. Keenan:

Last night I had the pleasure of witnessing a preview of your wonderful photoplay, "THE WORLD AFLAME", and desire to express my sincere thanks for having had the opportunity to be present.

A large part of the world is indeed aflame. Much of the rest of it is uneasy with apprehension as to what the future may hold. Economic questions must be better understood, and every man, and woman can find food for thought, comfort and encouragement in the lessons of your masterpiece of photoplay art, pointthe way, as it does, to closer industrial relationship and a warmer brotherhood of mankind.

I deem it a duty and a privilege, my good friend, to express my pleasure, in your success in "THE WORLD AFLAME" and to offer my hearty endorsement of its theme. It should be shown as widely as possible, so that every man, woman and child in the United States may see it, for it carries a message of true patriotism.

Please accept my congratulations upon "THE WORLD AFLAME", and my best wishes for its success in every country where it is shown.

Sincerely yours,
James Rolph Jr.
Mayor.

KEENAN RECEIVES OVATION IN WEST

During Visit to Seattle Pathe Star Is Guest of Mayor Ole Hanson.

INTERESTED IN LABORING MEN

Frank Keenan has taken the Northwest by storm, and, in his forceful, winning way, has done a powerful work in combatting the feeling of unrest among workmen of that territory. During his visit to Seattle Mr. Keenan was the guest of Mayor Hanson, whose determined stand against the men who virtually represent Bolshevism in the United States won him nationwide fame.

The meeting between Mayor Hanson and Mr. Keenan was a memorable event, because of the views in common held by the two men regarding American labor and the things that make for ideal Americanism. Mr. Keenan's special production, "The World Aflame," a Pathe release, deals with Seattle's historic strike and the world's solution of the situation which when carried out personally gathered a great deal of favorable comment from the press and local organizations.

Affame" carries a timely and most vital message.

It can be thoroughly impressed was the Mayor by the earnestness of Mr. Keenan's interest in the workingman, and of the great good which "The World Aflame" will do that he has offered to do everything possible to further its exploitation. He has even gone further than to endorse the production, by agreeing to appear in Seattle and [illegible] and make a speech during the run of "The World Aflame" at one of the theaters.

Cabinet Ministers and Other Government Notables Present When "World Aflame" Is Shown.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 1.

The Auditorium of the new building of the Interior Department was inaugurated as a playhouse for motion picture drama to-night, when "The World Aflame," a Pathe production, with Frank Keenan as the star, was put on before an audience composed of members of the Cabinet and many other Government officials and members of Congress.

Although this auditorium has frequently been used for the display of educational films and travel pictures, Secretary of the Interior Lane has never before assented to have a film drama produced there.

"The World Aflame," however, presents a particularly timely interest, dealing as it does with the industrial unrest now sweeping the country and the remedy to be found in the profit-sharing idea.

Many notables were in the audience this evening. Among them were Secretary of Labor Wilson, and Assistant Secretary Louis F. Post, Commissioner of Immigration Caminetti, Terence V. Powderly, of Knights of Labor fame, now an official of the Labor Department; Secretary of Commerce Redfield, Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, who chaperoned a party including a number of the officials of the United Mine Workers and Messrs. Lee and Stone of the Railway Brotherhoods, who have been here interviewing the President; Senator Colt, chairman of the Senate Immigration Committee; Senators Edge, Nugent, Johnson, King and Harrison, members of the committee; Chairman Homer Cummings, William Cochran and Peter F. Vroom of the National Democratic Committee, and a number of the members of the House Committee on Labor.

Gentlemen:

As a manufacturer and employer of a large number of workingmen in three factories, and having already established a profit-sharing policy with my employees, I feel that "THE WORLD AFLAME" moving picture which you showed me, is one of the best and timely things that could be presented to the American working man today. There positively must be a way in which difficulties can be settled between employe and employer, and I believe that the powerful story set forth by Mr. Frank Keenan in "THE WORLD AFLAME" is in a great measure the answer, and I would like to have every one of my employees see the picture.

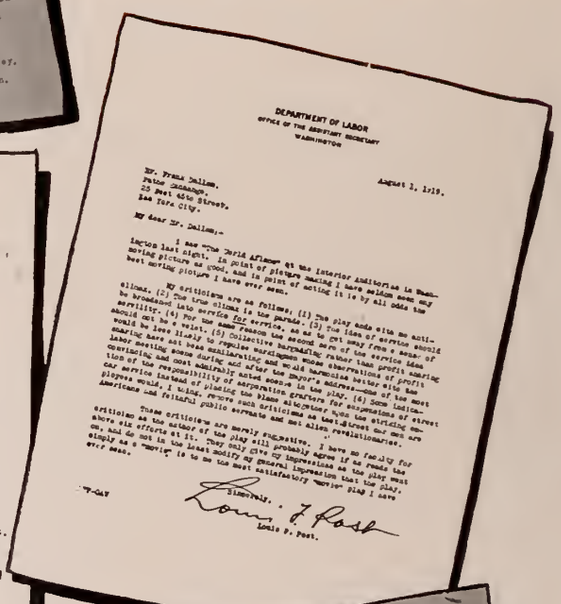
Mr. Pickrel,
Manager, Pathe Exchange,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

Dear Mr. Pickrel:

I desire to take this opportunity of thanking you for your kindness in inviting the Rotary Club to a private screening of that wonderful picture, "The World Aflame". I am sure that all who attended were impressed as I was with the masterly manner in which this picture portrays the problems arising out of the issues as between Capital and Labor.



The showing of this picture is particularly opportune at this time when the world seems to be in a state of almost chaotic unrest, an aftermath of the Great War. Strikes and rumors of strikes fill the columns of our daily papers. The minds of all people are so disturbed that they lend themselves very readily to the teachings of unsound, unbalanced economic doctrinaires.

On the other hand, our minds should be equally receptive of teachings that are sound and logical, hence, the great value of this picture. It wisely stresses the necessity of bringing the leaders of Capital and Labor together in order they might harmonize their differences and establish a basis of just settlement. Truly a wise and timely suggestion. This picture also shows very clearly that the difficulties in the path of such a settlement are not insurmountable, that they are, in fact, more fancied than real. It points to the utter folly of the use of brute force, especially at the instigation of Alien agitators, and emphasizes that the economic loss occasioned thereby falls equally on Capital and Labor and the Public at large.

Inasmuch as this question was gone into with great detail at the last International Convention of Rotary, it occurs to me that Rotary Clubs and similar organizations should be particularly interested in seeing this picture and I assure you that I will be only too happy to take advantage of all opportunities of interesting such Clubs in seeing it.

Thanking you again, I am

Yours very truly,

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY

Mr. Frank Dallam,
Patho Exchange,

New York City.

My dear Mr. Dallam:-

I saw "The World Aflame" at the Interior Auditorium in Washington last night. In point of picture making I have seldom seen any moving picture as good, and in point of acting it is by all odds the best moving picture I have ever seen.

My criticisms are as follows: (1) The play ends with an anti-climax. (2) The true climax is the parade. (3) The idea of service should be broadened into service for service, as set out many times in the course of the picture. (4) For the same reason the second scene of the service should not be a waist. (5) Collective bargaining rather than profit sharing would be more likely to regulate many happenings such as are pictured here. (6) Some indication of the responsibility of organized labor for the many outbreaks of violence during and after the war should accompany the scene depicting such outbreaks. (7) The employer's address at the opening meeting seems unfair and not in accord with the better mind of employers would, I think, remove such criticisms as have been indicated. (8) The street scenes during and after the parade are not typical of the streets of Washington, New York or other cities. (9

Story Fits Desmond's Talent

Hampton Said to Have Selected Well in "The Blue Bandana" Action Tale

DESPITE the difficulty of selecting a good play with a part particularly well adapted to a star with a long record of successes to uphold, Jesse D. Hampton has scored big in the selection of his latest William Desmond production, according to the Robertson-Cole announcement. "The Blue Bandanna" is the rather colorful title of the new Desmond play and it will be released by Robertson-Cole for distribution by Exhibitors Mutual.

The story is from the pen of Eugene B. Lewis, a new addition to the staff of the Hampton Studios, and the direction was in the hands of Joseph J. Frantz, who was responsible for the success of many other Hampton productions. It is a drama with many light comedy touches laid in the region of the Colorado-Wyoming cattle ranges and gives Desmond full opportunity for the fast action which has characterized many of his plays.

Jean Acker, who has met with considerable success as an ingenue, has the principal female role, and handles it to perfection. As the daughter of a mysterious rancher who is later found to be an ex-convict she is placed in situations which require acting of a high order and she is said to meet them favorably.

Among others in support are Russell Simpson, as the ex-convict rancher, and Frank Lanning in his favorite role of "bad man." Richard La Reno plays the Sheriff. The work of others making up the background of the picture is excellent and the production in general meets the high standard set by the reviewing committee of Robertson-Cole.

The theme of the story is in the unravelling of a mystery story centering about the robbery of a stage.

Pathe Heads a Unit in Praise of Serial

It is an adage with Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the selling force in order to sell a pictutre must first be sold themselves. Vice President and General Manager Brunet and Director of Exchanges Quimby, are both decidedly of the opinion that a salesman cannot convincingly tell an exhibitor of the merits of a subject unless he himself is an enthusiast on it, nor can a branch manager direct his selling effort, unless he is enthusiastic over the picture in question.

This state of mind is said to have been attained during the viewing of George B. Setiz's ten episode serial, "Bound and Gagged," scheduled for release October 26. The verdict of the Pathe chiefs was that it was one of the best, if not the best, ever turned out by the House of Pathe.

Southern Audiences Like Hayakawa

From the South comes a series of the most optimistic reports regarding the increased popularity of Robertson-Cole Hayakawa pictures. Bearing a recent date, a telegram from the manager of a theatre in a North Carolina town received by Exhibitors Mutual indicates the conversion of this exhibitor to the lure of the Japanese virtuoso of the screen.

William C. McIntyre, manager of the most popular house in Fayetteville, N. C., wires: "Sessue Hayakawa passing over the top. Advertised as his hundred percent picture an extra good fine photo drama. Public well-pleased with the picture. It pays to book good service and advertise it well."

This was but one of many such tributes received recently.

No Hitches in Filming of "Best of Luck"

Kathryn Adams, Frederic Malatesta and other members of the all-star cast now at work in the Screen Classics, Inc., picturization of the famous Drury Lane drama, "The Best of Luck," at the company's Hollywood studios, have concluded that there is something in a name, after all.

MacklynArbuckleBackAgain

Returns to Screen with San Antonio Pictures Corp.; to Produce in Texas

MACLYN ARBUCKLE, the star of the speaking stage, whose "The County Chairman" and 'The Round-Up," two of the greatest stage hits of the last two decades, will re-enter pictures. Announcement was made this week that the San Antonio Pictures Corporation has been formed in the Texas city for the express purpose of making photoplays starring the western character actor.

A studio site consisting of eleven acres has been purchased in the suburbs of San Antonio, near the famous Hot Wells. It is an ideal site in every respect, according to L. D. Wharton, director general of the new company. Formerly an old exposition park, a number of the buildings readily adapted themselves to screen usages, and what was formerly a large enclosed dance hall was remodeled and is now a large modern appointed studio with ample room for six scenes to be taken at once. The lighting is all of the very latest type, and was installed under the personal direction of Roy Baker, former technical director for the Whartons at Ithaca, N. Y.

The San Antonio Pictures Corporation plan to make a series of photoplays starring the man who created the character of "The County Chairman" on the stage, in which Mr. Arbuckle will supply the comedy. Comedy dramas of five or six reels, with love interest and plenty of action, is what the Texas company plan to make. Mr. Arbuckle will be seen in characters similar to those he has made famous on the American stage. Arrangements have already been made with several of the leading authors, to furnish original stories.

Big Circuit Signs for "Six Feet Four"

Proof of the very definite way in which "Six Feet Four" American's new six-reel special, has scored with the most prominent exhibitors of the country, is the quota of important contracts that every day brings into "Flying A" headquarters. Among the latest to sign up is the Jensen & Von Herberg circuit, which ranks as one of the biggest in the whole Northwest. This organization has booked "Six Feet Four" for first runs in their Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and Butte houses, the contract calling for showings varying from four to seven days. In Seattle the picture will be shown for a full week.

The contract for these cities was signed during the past week by J. Von Herberg personally.

Farnum's Latest from Old Play

"The Corsicans" Will Be Star's Biggest, Says Berst

WITH the announcement this week of "The Corsican Brothers" as the actual title of Dustin Farnum's forthcoming United offering, hitherto temporarily titled "The Honor of His Family," details can be given of the piece and production both of which are claimed to be of a strength and calibre surpassing any previous screen production in which this star has as yet appeared.

Since the first speaking stage performance in this country of the famous Dumas play, which was at the Old Bowery theatre, New York, in 1852, this great drama-romance has received no less than forty-four distinct and separate legitimate stage productions. Evidence of the great popularity of the piece is found in the fact that two burlesques of the play were successfully presented, one of them wtthin a month of the first production.

Abroad, "The Corsican Brothers" has been given countless presentations on the stage, and Dumas' book, of course, has been read by millions, and is known in every civilized country in the world.

News from J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres, who is now on the Coast giving his personal attention to the big production which Louis J. Gasnier is supervising for United at the Astra Studios, Glendale, Cal., is to the effect that in magnitude of settings, strength of cast, elaborateness of detail and skillful direction, secured regardless of cost in the determination to make the offering one of surpassing importance and value to exhibitors, Dustin Farnum will head in the forthcoming vehicle a notable super-feature.

The main part of the story is laid in the Island of Corsica and in Paris in the year 1841. The piece calls for elaborate settings including the picturesque village life of mountainous Corsica and the luxurious and costly appurtenances of the Paris of the period. For the former, advantage is being taken of the proximity to Los Angeles of the Island of Catalina, which, incidentally is well representative of the rugged wildness of Corsica. Its picturesque mountains and its beautiful bays with the blue Pacific much resembling the waters of the northern Mediterranean lend themselves excellently to the representation of the Corsican land and sea scenes of the story. For the Parisian scenes sets have been constructed at the Astra Studios, which in magnitude, atmosphere and accuracy carry the true effect of their prototype, it is said.

Mr. Berst, in consultation with Mr. Gasnier and Mr. Farnum, engaged a pre-eminent cast in keeping with the calibre of the production. Dustin Farnum is, of course, seen in the roles of the two brothers, Louis and Fabian, and is supported by Winifred Kingston in the leading female role of Emilie, Andrew Robson as General Lesparre, Ogden Crane as Orlando, J. Palvez, Sidney Payne, Fanny Midgley as Mme. de Franchi, Evett Mitchell, Tote Du Crow, Pearl Levier, Mme. Mastine, and Wedgwood Nowell among others. One thousand extra people are said to be employed in ensemble.

Bert Lytell, Metro star, in "Lombardi, Ltd."

Alan Forrest Opposite May Allison

Alan Forrest has been engaged as leading man for May Allison in "The Walk Offs," her forthcoming Screen Classics special production. The young actor has had an extensive experience on the stage and on the screen. For the past two years he has played leads opposite Mary Miles Minter.

Mr. Forrest is cast in the role of Robert Shirley Winston, a cultured but unsophisticated Kentuckian, in "The Walk Offs."

Denies That Brady Is to Rejoin World Film

Briton N. Busch, who has just been made General Manager of the World Film Corporation, was asked concerning the authenticity of the report that appeared in print to the effect that Mr. William A. Brady was about to be again associated with the World Film Corporation. He states that all such rumors are absolutely without foundation, and that there are no negotiations with Mr. Brady for his association with the World.

"The Amazing Wife"

THE story of a poverty-stricken girl who claims an officer supposedly killed in France as her husband and who is taken into his family as his widow. One day the "husband" comes to life and the fair imposter sees shame and disgrace staring her in the face. A picture that holds its audiences breathless right to its beautiful end. You can't show anything surer of making a hit.

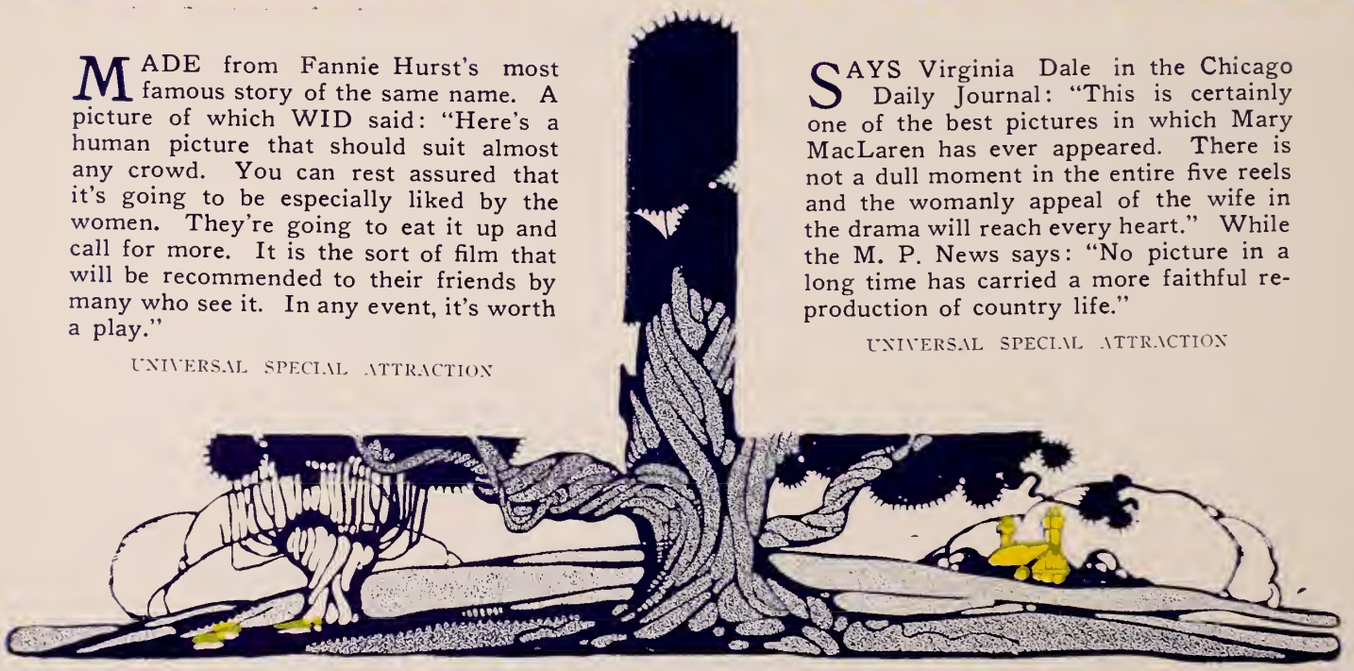
UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

"The Weather Vane"

THIS is the comedy-drama that Julian Johnson, Editor of Photoplay, praised so highly—the one which he said was "a true-to-life, positive uproar." He further said that it was one of the most adroit pieces of photoplay construction he had ever seen. Everywhere that this picture has been shown people have been intensely amused by it. It is realistic, sufficiently dramatic and outrageously funny.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

"The Petal on the Current"



MADE from Fannie Hurst's most famous story of the same name. A picture of which WID said: "Here's a human picture that should suit almost any crowd. You can rest assured that it's going to be especially liked by the women. They're going to eat it up and call for more. It is the sort of film that will be recommended to their friends by many who see it. In any event, it's worth a play."

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

"The Unpaid Wages"

SAYS Virginia Dale in the Chicago Daily Journal: "This is certainly one of the best pictures in which Mary MacLaren has ever appeared. There is not a dull moment in the entire five reels and the womanly appeal of the wife in the drama will reach every heart." While the M. P. News says: "No picture in a long time has carried a more faithful reproduction of country life."

Six reasons why Fox Sunshine Comedies are popular

Fox Gets Rights to a Big Story

In line with the policy of Fox Corporation to supply its stars with the best material obtainable for each it is announced that William Fox has just closed negotiations for the screen rights to one of the best of the many stories from the pen of Natalie Sumner Lincoln, an American writer of international reputation.

The story purchased is entitled "The Official Chaperon," and is of a light comedy type. No star has been selected for it as yet.

Plays in "The Hellion"

Lillian Langdon, who mothers Margarita Fisher in her next American Production, "The Hellion," bears a striking resemblance to Douglas Fairbanks and has appeared as his screen mother in five of the Fairbanks releases. "The Hellion," the second special on American's list, is based on an original drama by Daniel F. Whitcomb. Among the men enacting important roles are Emory Johnson, Henry Barrows, Charles Spere, George Periolat, Frank Clark and Bull Montana. The production is announced for early release.

The Albert Capellani production of "A Damsel in Distress" heads the Pathe program of release scheduled for November 12. The play has been made into a light comedy drama in five parts from a successful serial which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and offers as stars Creighton Hale and June Caprice.

Great Line of Aids on Comics

Pathe Announces Aids Suitable to the Biggest Features for Lloyd's Series

THE most complete line of exhibitors' aids yet issued on comedies of any description is claimed in those which will be supplied by Pathe on the new series of special $100,000 two-reel Lloyd comedies, which will be inaugurated with "Bumping Into Broadway" on November 2.

Emphasizing the importance with which it regards the new Lloyd specials, Pathe calls attention to the fact that it will issue the first stock twenty-four sheet ever lithographed for a comedy.

The widest line of advertising matter is included in the exploitation material mapped out for the new specials.

Included in the list of exhibitor's aids will be found stock one-sheet posters; stock three-sheet poster; stock 22x28 of Harold Lloyd; stock twenty-four sheet poster; stock slide; special one-sheet on each release; special three sheet for each release; special six-sheet on each subject; special 11x14 colored lobby photos on each issue; special colored slide on each release; special combination broadside press sheet on each release; special one-column line ad. cut on each release; special two-column line ad. on each release, and also a special three-column line ad.

Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges for Pathe, during a tour of several weeks' duration, which brought him into almost every important motion picture distribution centre of the country, discussed with leading exhibitors their needs in accessories lines for comedy exploitation purposes. The result of these discussions has been the outlining of the advertising material mentioned.

Backing up all these accessories will be the million-dollar advertising campaign announced by Pathe a month ago. The greatest stress on the new Lloyd features will be laid in the big advertising scheduled to begin shortly in the Saturday Evening Post.

Tie-Up on a Robertson-Cole

"The House of Intrigue" Gets Aid in Campaign of Two Publishing Houses

"THE HOUSE OF INTRIGUE," the Robertson-Cole production, distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual, is getting the benefit of one of the most extensive exploitation and advertising campaigns of recent months. Bobbs-Merrill, the publishers of the famous Arthur W. Stringer story, which first appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and the McClure Syndicate are both, coincident with the release of the picture, engaged in an extensive exploitation of the story.

All the large book stores throughout the country have been enlisted in the Bobbs-Merrill sales effort, and practically all of the book shops will carry window displays, while the picture is showing in nearby theatres and exhibitors are urged to co-operate with the local bookman, so that the shop windows may advertise the theatre, and the theatre may advertise the book store.

In addition to the specific work of the book stores a general effort in favor of the book is under way, and this, of course, will have a great influence in popularizing the screen version. It is believed that at the close of the campaign "The House of Intrigue" will come close to being regarded as the most widely read book published in this country with the exception of the Bible and a few standard classics that are read by every one.

The McClure Syndicate have released the story in serial form to many of the largest newspapers in the country and theatre newspaper tie-ups are now under way in several instances. One of the notable cases of live exploitation in the work of the management of Proctor's theatre in Albany with the Albany Knickerbocker Press.

Twenty-five thousand half sheets advertising the fact that the story was running in the newspaper, and could be seen at the theatre even spread through the city and surrounding country.

The result of the first week's showing of the picture was as might be expected a fitting reward for the energy of the campaign of exploitaion. A record-breaking week was achieved.

Daredevil Thrills by Leap Over Chasm

Charles Hutchison was the magnet who drew hundreds of late lingerers in the Adirondacks to Ausable Chasm last week when they came by every conceivable conveyance to watch him make his daring motorcycle leap forty feet across the chasm where it is 170 feet deep.

Time and again has Hutchison, who is known as the most daring of all of screendom's dare devils, taken his life in his hands, but never, it is said, has he attempted anything more breath taking. To those who gathered about the chasm, as close as the director and camerman would allow, the feat did not seem humanly possible.

An an evidence of the care and thoroughness which the Allgood people are expending in making this serial of the highest type was the announcement this week that they had signed Jules W. Redston, a well known technical director, to take charge of all the sets for the interiors, as well as to design them and costumes. Mr. Redston was until recently with the Goldwyn company, where he came into notice for his fine work in designing sets for pictures for Geraldine Farrar, Madge Kennedy, Mabel Normand and others.

Gale Henry Establishes Scenario Dept.

The Model Comedy Company, of which Gale Henry is the star and head, has erected a scenario department at its new studio quarters in Hollywood. A staff of writers, headed by George Lynn Harrison, who for the past few years has been well known in journalistic circles in England, are busily engaged with pen and typewriter writing stories featuring Miss Henry. Director General Bruno J. Becker says the company, however, will gladly continue to receive two reel subjects from outside writers.

Crest Picture Titled

Carle Carlton has announced that Somebody's Children is the title that has been decided on for the first Paul Scardon Crest Pictures production wherein Edith Day enacts the leading role, supported by a distinguished cast.

The production will be released about the first week in October.

Alice Lake, Metro star

Titling Russell Production

WILLIAM RUSSELL, under the direction of Harry Millarde, has completed work on "Sacred Silence," his first picture for William Fox. The story, a strong one, is from the pen of Robert Peyton Carter and Anna Alice Chapin. It was a most successful play on the speaking stage under the title "The Deserter." Roy Somerville adapted it for the screen, and he has made a truly remarkable photoplay.

"Sacred Silence" is not a war picture in any sense of the word. "The Deserter," its stage title, led many to believe that it would be a film based on the great struggle. It is not. It is a picture of peace time.

William Russell appears as Jim Craig. This is a virile, red-blooded part that fits Mr. Russell perfectly, and in its interpretation he finds full room for his athletic powers. He has a supporting company which might be readily termed all-star and the production promises to figure as one of the finest releases on the Fox program for 1919-20.

Agnes Ayres, leading woman for Mr. Russell, brings to the role of Madge Summers all the sympathy that it demands. She is a finished artist, a star in her own right, and her appealing portrayal of a secret service agent will win for her a host of new friends.

As soon as he had finished "Sacred Silence" William Russell began work on "Eastward Ho," founded on Harry MacCleod Raine's well known story. This picture is being directed by Emmett J. Flynn, with John J. Foley as his assistant.

Director Consults Exhibitor

A DIRECTOR of a new type is Wesley Ruggles, recently engaged by Selznick Pictures, to handle Owen Moore in his first Selznick production, "Piccadilly Jim," by P. G. Wodehouse. He not only believes in turning out a screen play that satisfies his own artistic standards and lives up to his theories, but reasons also that a picture, unless it meets with the approval of branch managers and exhibitors, is lacking in something very vital to its success.

In pursuance of this idea he has just finished visiting a number of the men who sell Selznick Pictures. The opportunity to do this came to him while en route to the coast to see his parents. Having returned from service with the A. E. F. only a short time ago, he was eager to say "hello" to the home-folks before buckling down to a long spell of work. Myron Selznick granted him permission to do this.

The fact that he intended to stop off at Chicago, Denver and Los Angeles to talk to exchange men concerning "Piccadilly Jim" he kept a dark secret. When reports from these sources of receptions to Ruggles reached the home office surprise was undisguised.

Then Ruggles himself appeared on the scene and let the details of his little quiet expedition out of the bag. "I've always had a pet idea," he said, "that exchange men and exhibitors know a good deal more about pictures than they are generally given credit.

Many Fox Features for October

Well Balanced Program if Presented for the Month

NEARLY all the William Fox stars are represented in the scheduled releases from that ducing organization for the month of October.

Beginning with October 5, Fox Film Corporation has listed fourteen productions for the tenth month of the year—many of them of first importance in the Fox season's program. Among them are vehicles of such favorite as William Farnum, Tom Mix, Madlaine Traverse, Gladys Brockwell, William Russell, and Albert Ray with Elinor Fair. The Sunshine Comedies also are well represented and, of course, there are the inimitable comedians, Mutt and Jeff, issued weekly.

On October 5 there are two releases. One is "The Lost Princess," starring Albert Ray with Elinor Fair. The leading members of the cast of "The Lost Princess," are George Hermandez, Maggie Halloway, Fisher, Edward Cecil, Burt Wesner, H. C. Simmons and Fred Bond. George Schneiderman turned the camera for the picture.

Also on October 5 comes an Animated Cartoon of Bud Fisher's "Mutt and Jeff" series, entitled "Honest Book Agents."

October 11, as has been widely announced throughout the world, is the date set for the showing of the first of the great Fox News reels. This new enterprise has aroused the most acute interest among motion picture theatre men. The first reel will show, in addition to unique features gathered from all parts of the globe, a letter of commendation on Fox News received from President Wilson by Fox Film Corporation.

The most important date in the month, so far as quantity is concerned, is October 12. The Fox organization then releases five subjects—two or these, "The Last of the Duanes," with William Farnum, and "Kathleen Mavourneen," with Theda Bara, having already scored triumphs on Broadway, thus creating widespread interest among exhibitors.

Third of the Fox pictures listed for release on the 12th is the first of the big plays in which William Russell appears as a Fox star. This is "Sacred Silence." Harry Millards, prominent as a Fox director, staged the picture, and George Lane photographed it.

A Fox Sunshine Comedy, sparkling with novel incident and pulsating with pulchritudinal charm furnished by the Sunshine Beauty Brigade, is entitled "Wild Waves and Women."

Following immediately upon the heels of "Wild Waves and Women" comes the second Mutt and Jeff for the month, "The Chambermaid's Revenge."

The Tom Mix contribution to the October schedule comes out on the 19th of the month, under the title of "The Speed Maniac."

"The Speed Maniac" gives Tom Mix an extraordinary role, even for him, and shows a lot of new stuff for the seekers of thrills. "The Speed Maniac" is taken from an original story by H. H. Van Loan, writer of many screen successes and was adapted by Denison Clift.

A striking dramatic offering entitled "Snares of Paris" is the vehicle in which the "Empress of Stormy Emotion," Madlaine Traverse makes her October bow on the 19th. The story is one of love, ambition, intrigue and villainous plotting, and of ultimate redemption brought about in a most unusual manner by the author, Denison Clift.

"Pretzel Farming" is the name of the Mutt and Jeff for October 19—the title offering a gentle hint as to the theme of the story; for a story it is.

The last October release date scheduled by Fox, the 26th shows three pictures, beginning with "Chasing Rainbows," which has Gladys Brockwell, one of the most popular of screen artists, in the stellar role.

The second of the releases for October 26 is another of those Sunshine Comedies; this one is called "The Yellow Dog Catcher."

"Why Mutt Left the Village" represents the rear guard of the Fox releases for the month. It comes out also on the 26th, and shows what can be made of black and white cartoons.

Dwan a Stickler for Detail

Much Research Work Evidenced in the Production of "Soldiers of Fortune"

THAT the better pictures movement has reflected itself in attention being given by directors to details which have only indirect bearing on the story is evidenced by a statement from the Allan Dwan studios in California. Mr. Dwan has just completed "Soldiers of Fortune," written by Richard Harding Davis and dramatized by Augustus Thomas and the director asserts he has given especially careful consideration to proper presentation of the people of the novel and the geographical location of the story.

A story laid in South America, in a certain province of a certain country, must be filmed true to the given place. "If the shake of the head means, 'yes' to the natives and no word is used, substitute the motion for the word," said Dwan.

Again, in the director's opinion, while it is true love is the same the world over, how one loves—expresses the emotions in words or action—is controlled by customs, training and temperament. Dwan's research department spent much time in the attempt to determine how the characters of the story loved, what heights of ecstasies reached or whether they were phlegmatic, matter-of-fact lovers.

How the people lived came in for its full share of Dwanesque scrutiny. Did the people live on fatty foods? Were they athletic? Did they have to fight hard for an existence, or was nature bountiful? Many similar questions came up which had to be answered correctly if Dwan could cast true to type. The exhibitor casually inspecting the film on his screen will never guess what "research" meant in connection with this production. And the little matter of "locations"—that just enfold neatly for the exhibitor on his handy screen! After a futile search Dwan decided to hunt for locations via the air route. Accompanied by his associate, Arthur Rosson, the trip was made soaring along the Coast and over mountains until suitable locations were sighted and "clinched."

The cutting and editing of the picture Dwan trusted to no one. He installed a projection room in his summer home so as to give this branch of the work all his spare time. With the findings of the research department before him, each scene was gone over carefully and to the producer's ultimate satisfaction.

Two Metro Specials Started

"The Willow Tree" with Viola Dana and "The Walk-Offs" with May Allison Begun

VIRTUALLY duplicating his achievement in finishing the first three of the Screen Classics, Inc., specials to be distributed by Metro under its "fewer and better" pictures policy, almost simultaneously, Maxwell Karger, director general, has gotton away to a flying start with two more. The two new ones are "The Willow Tree," with Viola Dana as its star, and "The Walk-Offs," starring May Allison.

Miss Dana went to work in "The Willow Tree," a picturization of the Cohan and Harris stage success by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes, before Director General Karger had completed the selection of her supporting cast. June Mathis, head of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario staff, adapted the Japanese fantasy and placed the manuscript in the hands of Henry Otto.

When Miss Allison began work in "The Walk-Offs," the Oliver Morosco stage success by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, her leading man and another principal supporting player had been engaged. They are, respectively, Alan Forrest and Darrell Foss. Mr. Forrest is portraying Robert Shirley Winston, the young Kentuckian, who has an exhilarating experience among the "walk-offs," or parasitical snobs of a certain New York smart set. Mr. Foss has the part of the heroine's brother in the screen dramatization.

"The Walk-Offs" is the fourth Morosco stage hit to find its way to the screen by the Metro route. The other three are "The Brat," starring Nazimova: "Lombardi, Ltd.," with Bert Lytell, and "Please Get Married," Miss Dana's newest vehicle.

To Spread Goldwyn Name

Campaign Will Involve Four Hundred Newspapers, All Carefully Selected

AS a part of what promises to be the most extensive campaign ever conducted, Gldwyn Pictures Corporation will appear in some four hundred newspapers on October 15th, with display announcements, to be followed by steady advertising tied up with exhibitors in all parts of the country. During the next twelve months, newspaper readers, whether they are in large cities or the smallest towns will be kept informed about the activities of Goldwyn stars, the Eminent Authors and all other producing factors in the twenty-million-dollar corporation, according to the plans laid out in great detail by Director of Advertising Charles D. Isaacson.

In describing the method followed in selecting the mediums to be used, Mr. Isaacson said: "Reports of the most exhaustive nature have been received from Goldwyn's press and service representatives in the twenty-two exchanges. They have made thorough surveys of the territories to which they have been assigned, with a view to learning the immediate needs of the exhibitors they serve and to giving the home office definite knowledge of the standing of the newspapers through which motion picture patrons may be reached.

"Instead of preparing general advertisements to be inserted at random, regardless of the situation to be met in certain localities special copy will be written according to the specific needs of the exhibitor at a certain time and in a certain place. It is recognized that with conditions varying as they do from month to month and according to the community, advertising copy to realize its greatest power must be designed along lines suggested by men closely in touch with each locality.

"Several factors have been considered in the selection of the newspapers that will carry the first Goldwyn copy. Circulation and the class of readers appealed to have been deemed important.

Nehls Tells American's Plans

Has Been Supervising the Big Productions at the West Coast Studios

AFTER a sojourn of some weeks at the studios in Santa Barbara, where he has been supervising the work of beginning the big productions which are to form the offerings of American during the season of 1919-1920, General Manager Richard R. Nehls of the American Film Company, Inc., has just returned to the general offices of the company in Chicago.

"Things are surely booming on the coast," asserted Mr. Nehls when chatting with a News interviewer, following his return to Chicago, "and I have no doubt you are already aware that American for the coming season is offering exhibitors productions that are, without qualification, the best the market affords. A number of the trade journals have already passed judgment upon 'Six Feet Four,' our first offering under the new policy, and every theater which has played it to date has found it an even bigger attraction than we claimed it to be.

"'The Hellion,' our offering immediately following 'Six Feet Four,' is another top-notch feature," went on Mr. Nehls; "and just as soon as it is screened I am confident it will receive an equal quota of praise.

"When I left the coast the studio force was just completing the final scenes of a feature that we anticipate will prove still more popular than the two already mentioned. It is entitled "Eve in Exile," and is from the pen of Cosmo Hamilton, the author of "Scandal"—a play which, as you doubtless know, has enjoyed one of the most phenomenal runs in the history of the theatre. This new feature of ours will offer a star who has never before appeared in an American production, but one whom every exhibitor will consider a real box-office asset.

"You know, I presume, that American is making each of its 1919-1920 productions as a separate entity—that each picture is handled as though that were the only production we ever expected to make. The star, the director and each individual member of the supporting cast is engaged for that picture and that picture alone. If some of them happen to be also adaptable for parts in the picture next undertaken they are re-engaged—otherwise not. That this policy is well founded and results in superior pictures, I am certain no one will question for a moment after seeing the results.

Pathe Review Soon Enlarged

Extra Features to Be Added Following Change from Semi-Monthly to Weekly

CONCURRENT with the establishment of the Pathe Review as a weekly feature, instead of a semi-monthly release, it is announced that the scope of this entertaining reel, always broad and thoroughly diversified, will assume a broader nature. Many new features will be introduced into The Review, which in reality is a motion picture magazine of science, education, industry and scenic features.

The world will be scoured for subjects for the broadened Review, and under the new plans recently formulated every effort will be made to avoid the stereotyped in screen magazine material. One of the novelties which Pathe will introduce in The Review, is a series called "The Spirit of the Dance." Fifty-two dances will be exhibited in this series, and the manner in which they will be arranged and introduced on the screen will be most extraordinary in film annals.

Julian Ollendorff, the famous artist and illustrator, is making a series of fifty-two sketches illustrating the various dances to be interpreted for The Pathe Review by the famous terpsichorean artists. These drawings will appear on the screen as a prelude to the actual dances, and the plan is to have the various dancers walk virtually out of Ollendorff's panel.

Among the artists who will perform in The Review's "Spirit of the Dance" series are Ruth St. Denis, one of America's foremost interpreters of the classics; Mme. Lobowsky, Ada Forman, another great American dancer, and Edna Fontaine, of the Ziegfield Follies.

It is also proposed to enlarge on the Novagraph slow-motion process pictures, which have become one of the most firmly established and popular subjects in The Review. Extra footage will be devoted to this feature, and subjects heretofore not touched by the ultra-rapid camera will be brought before the public. Realizing the value of well written captions to any motion picture subject. Pathe has engaged special men to title them.

Industry Needs Independents

"IN the light of various big efforts to secure theatres in various cities, it behooves these large interests, to take well into consideration, the disintergation of the one night stand and loss to the legitimate field of its most imaginative producers. To wit, Frank Perley, Edward E. Rice, Mort Singer, Lincoln Carter and others.

"When Klaw and Erlanger, practically cornered the small one night stands throughout America and began dictating terms to such remarkable producers as those mentioned, and Joseph Gaites, Sire Brothers and Messrs. Shubert, the independent producer was wiped off the map. The quality of productions began dropping. The organized producer, to fill the gap made vacant by the independent producer, was compelled to create greater numbers of plays a year with the consequent result that his product became worse and worse.

"Plays were produced, opened on Broadway, played to less than it cost to maintain a stage crew—then sent post haste on tour and slowly but surely the one night stand manager turned his house into a film theatre or closed entirely. He could not earn salary as the owner of a piece of theatrical property.

"Throughout a season, he would receive twenty shows, all produced by the same firm, with play, plots, casts, ideas and scenic effects devised by the same organization. There was lack of variety, lack of novelty, lack, of enterprise—merely—fillers, hurriedly sent out, and from paying business, one night stands became white elephants.

"And this condition exists right now in filmdom.

BILL PARSONS DIES

WILLIAM PARSONS, president of the National Film Corporation of America, known throughout the film world as "Smiling" Bill Parsons, died last week. The illness which caused his death resulted from a cold which he had contracted about a week before his death.

Mr. Parsons was known as one of our best "light comedians," having appeared in many comedies which delighted and amused his followers. He had a this a personality which when once seen could never be forgotten.

Before his entry into the film industry he was a prominent insurance broker.

American Announces Super-Film

"The Hellion" Said to Be a Noteworthy Release

AMERICAN FILM COMPANY is announcing in the advertising columns of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week another of its super-productions. "The Hellion," which is from the pen of Daniel F. Whitcomb, is referred to as a feature of tremendous dramatic force, and called the strongest in which Margarita Fisher has ever appeared. Though Miss Fisher is the feature star, the role of "The Hellion" is enacted by George Periolat and many believe that he does the greatest bit of acting in his entire career, claiming his ability as a master of make-up was never better displayed.

This picture, like other forthcoming American Features, was made as a separate entity, the cast, director and all in fact having anything to do with the production being specially employed for this picture and this picture alone, though several of them had been engaged for roles in former American productions. Emory Johnson has an important part in the cast and others whom exhibitors will remember from previous appearances are Lillian Langdon, Charles Spere, Henry Barrows, Frank Clark and "Bull" Montana.

Exhibitors who judge "The Hellion" by any of the former pictures in which Margarita Fisher has appeared will go far wrong in their estimate of the picture, according to American for she has never enjoyed a role in the past which can in any sense be compared with the part of "Mazie Del Mar" which she enacts now. Credited by many with being a comedienne, she proves in "The Hellion" that she can interpret tense dramatic roles with equal effect. As the dancing star of an underworld cafe, taken into the home of a wealthy man on the understanding that she shall pretend to be his daughter, she has opportunity for display of histrionic ability rarely accorded the most versatile of stars, but she more than takes advantage of the opportunity afforded.

The American Film Company representatives have shown the feature to a number of critics and should feel highly elated over the comments that have been made. One famous newspaper critic refers to the picture as "A dramatic thunderbolt—an emotional tornado." Another hardened reviewer of pictures compared "The Hellion" to "Trilby" and asserted that George Periolat in his character impersonation had created a role that would easily rival that of "Svengli" in "Trilby."

One official of the American Film Company in discussing "The Hellion with a News representative said:

"Here's the kind of a picture that hundreds of exhibitors have long clamored for, saying that if they only had pictures that would bear unlimited exploitation they could pack their houses to the doors nightly. "The Hellion" is, we believe, a picture that will enable any exhibitor to demonstrate the kind of a showman he is. It will bear featuring in a sensational manner for it is a sensational picture. The exhibitor who is fond of circus methods, seeking an opportunity for unusual and bizarre advertising—the offering of an unusual picture in a novel and original way, can play 'The Hellion' to capacity business for several weeks, and at tremendous profit.

Goldwyn Well Ahead of Schedule

Players and Directors Are Hard at Work on Coast

AS a result of incessant work during the past few months on the nine stages of Goldwyn's Culver City studios, the directors and players at the production headquarters are well ahead of the schedule of releases and two of the stars are enjoying short vacations prior to starting work on their next pictures. Pauline Frederick, having finished a production under the direction of William Parke, left immediately for New York, and Tom Moore, who recently made the closing scenes in a picture directed by Harry Beaumont is now on his way east.

Word has just been received from the Culver City studios that Mr. Beaumont has been assigned to direct Jack Pickford's first Goldwyn production, an adaptation of John Fox, Jr.'s most famous novel, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." The company to support the young Goldwyn star is now being chosen and as soon as the selection of players has been completed work will be started on the picture.

Miss Frederick's stay in New York will be of short duration for in a month's time she is scheduled to start making scenes for the screen version of A. H. Woods' renowned stage success, "The Woman in Room 13," which was one of the first two plays selected by Samuel Goldwyn from the great number made available through the alliance with the Shuberts, Woods and the Selwyns. The other Woods' drama, also chosen as a starring vehicle for Miss Frederick, is "Roads of Destiny." Tom Moore will have to make the most of a short visit to New York. By the end of October he is expected back at Culver City to appear in "Duds," an adaptation by Harvey Thew of a novel published serially in The Saturday Evening Post.

Conceded by all who have seen it in preparation to be the most elaborate production in which she has ever appeared, Geraldine Farrar has concluded another super-picture, directed by Reginald Barker, and is packing her trunks preparatory to coming East to open a concert tour, October 4th. The famous diva will, of course, return to the coast as soon as she has filled her stage engagements for the winter season, and meanwhile Director Barker will keep busy turning out pictures presenting other stars, or making what will be featured as Reginald Barker Productions.

Mabel Normand, who is about half way through with a story written and being directed by Victor Schertzinger, has just returned from a week's expedition to the Mojave Desert. Director Frank Lloyd also is among the seekers for local color calculated to add realism to his scenes. This time he has taken his company to San Francisco to get just the right thing in locations for a big fight scene in the screen version of Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde," an Eminent Authors production.

Other Eminent Authors Pictures that are nearing completion at Culver City are Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury," directed by T. Hayes Hunter and Basil King's "The Street Called Straight," the filming of which is handled by Wallace Worsley.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Short Subjects, Comedies and Other Features Reviewed on This Page

"Back Stage"

(A Two-Reel Arbuckle-Paramount Comedy —Released September 7)

JUST as "A Desert Hero" was a corking good burlesque on the screen melodrama of the wild and wooly west, "Back Stage" is a sure fire travesty on the small town show appearing at the "Opry House."

The opening shows the "rube" proprietor of the house preparing for the expected visit of the traveling show that night. It happened in this instance to be a vaudeville combination with the "sis" character rehearsing his dancing number; the strong man and his much abused girl traveling companion getting located, with Fatty Arbuckle, property man and bill poster hovering about in the offing.

Clever acrobatics of the stage-hand-assistant to Arbuckle stands out as one of the very striking features of this offering.

A very laughable incident is the posting of a six-sheet by the star and the opening of a door which divides the announcement into a description which astonishes the natives of the town. A big attendance was present that night but the strong man and his troupe refuses to go on with the show.

The girl and Fatty with the assistant and house manager determine to keep the money in the box office and attempt to give the show themselves. It is full of laughs and rapid action especially as the strong man and his troupe are in the audience with the intention of hooting the show.

In the Romeo and Juliet episode the scenery falls and shows the girl standing on the top of a step ladder. Innumerable situations of this kind are responsible for the almost continuous laughter.

Yes, there is plenty of slapstick, but it is clean, and this comedy will generally entertain everybody wherever it is shown.—Tom Hamlin.

"In Spain"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

MUTT AND JEFF are trouping again in this number. They are never content to remain "on location" very long but must seek new worlds to conquer. The freaks have been on the Chautauqua circuit before (it looks like Chautauqua to us for you cannot call their act Big Time) and so we know what to expect. We know that little Jeff will be toward the ceiling of the opry house in the projection booth turning the crank while his elongated pal will be using the pointer on their new lecture, "In Spain." "Ready Jeff?" "Shoot!"

"And now, ladies and gentlemen, if you will watch the screen closely you will see us departing for sunny Spain." To quote the oratorical Mutt. "You will notice that the man on the bicycle is yours truly because he is so handsome, while the hop-toad on the balloon is my little sidekick, Jeff." "And so we are in Spain." "You will observe that good bull-fighters are scarce and that we accept the job of throwing the bull with great eclat." "But to qualify, the tall fellow cries out, 'We must first practice the art of camouflage.'"

And so the spectator sees the freaks masquerading as a bull, Jeff as the front legs and head, Mut as—well as the rest of the animal. The toreador is in the arena mustering up courage. But when he leaves the freaks do not discover that a genuine bull has been admitted. Not until he charges them in typical "bully" fashion. Then it is a problem to get out of the disguise. Hilarity reigns when Mutt and Jeff stretch their animal out of shape in their eagerness to avoid the onrushing bull. Mutt being on the tail end is having a merry time in trying to make the cloth (or whatever it is) behave. But the bull, being a bull, is determined and finally he catches the masqueraders.—Laurence Reid.

HEAVILY dramatic, melodramatic and tragic in spots, portraying in one of the principal roles a villain absolutely without conscience plotting for wealth and power regardless of whom he may sacrifice.

It is a story of sadness with the inevitable happy future pictured at the finish, but as this is easily anticipated the suspense is nil. A well produced picture for this sort of story and handled by a capable and nicely balanced cast. Continuity is easy to follow and both photography and laboratory work are up to present day standards.

There are several thrills and much pathos, with no comedy relief. The star shows ability in portraying the roles of twin sisters. A picture that will be generally quite acceptable.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Twin Pawns," the Pathe picture starring Mae Murray, will come to the ——— theatre beginning ———. The photoplay is adapted from Wilkie Collins' famous novel, "The Woman in White," and it has been produced under the direction of Leonce Perret. The story is melodrama pure and simple and concerns twin sisters, Violet and Daisy White. They have been separated since childhood—in fact each is unaware of the existence of the other. Violet, the idol of her indulgent father, has everything her heart could wish, but Daisy, who has been raised by her mother, is poorly clad and underfed. The fragile child of the slums is not aware that John Bent possesses certain papers which state her true relation to Harry White. By hiding from Daisy's father the truth of her existence, Bent is able to shift the twins to his own best advantage—they become mere pawns in other words. He hides Daisy away in a school and substitutes her for Violet, who is forced to marry him, when the former girl really dies. Violet, he disposes of by having her declared insane and placed in an asylum. But her sweetheart, Bob Anderson, comes to the rescue and a happy ending follows.

"The Twin Pawns" is one of those stories which strikes out from the shoulder at the beginning of the first reel and holds the spectator in a tight embrace. Miss Murray differentiates the roles of the sisters with fine understanding and feeling and she is surrounded by a competent cast that includes such well known players as Warner Oland, J. W. Johnston, Henry G. Sell, and others. The director has given the picture many beautiful settings besides bringing out the high lights of the story.

CATCH LINES

PROGRAM READER

When you go to the ——— theatre next ——— you will see the "Maid of many moods," Mae Murray portraying the dual role of twin sisters. You will see an adaptation of Wilkie Collins' famous novel, "The Woman in White," entitled "The Twin Pawns." It is a good old-fashioned melodrama and unfolds a rich number of scenes—scenes which are charged with pathos, humor, heart interest, and romance. You will see a man's craving for wealth and power—a man's lust for greed that hesitates at nothing to accomplish his evil desires. You will see Mae Murray as twin sisters who are separated in their youth. To give the plot in detail would be to remove much of the pleasure in seeing "The Twin Pawns" on the screen. Suffice to say that it is an excellent picture in every respect. The star is supported by a competent cast and the picture is produced under the direction of Leonce Perret, the man responsible for "The Thirteenth Chair." Remember the date, next ———. Be sure and see it.

SUGGESTIONS

There are four big exploitation angles to advertise this picture. First place must be given to Mae Murray, who is popularly called the "Maid of many moods." So feature her as such. Play her up big in stills and feature stories. She is remarkably beautiful and this fact should be impressed upon your audiences who are unacquainted with her. Mention that Warner Oland is associated with her. Bring out that the picture is taken from a world famous story—that it is adapted from Wilkie Collins' novel, "The Woman in White." Then mention the director and tell that he is responsible for that high-class picture, "The Thirteenth Chair." Finally emphasize that the story is a red-blooded melodrama, but which has a rich setting. Use circular letters stating that the beautiful Mae Murray will appear at the ——— next ——— in a fascinating story of triumphant virtue. You can distribute handbills or dodgers here with an appropriate catch line incorporated. Obtain all the advertising sheets from your nearest Pathe exchange and play them up. And use catch lines. We have written a number with that object in mind. Put plenty of punch in your copy. It is an exciting melodrama and calls for vigorous advertising.

"THE LIFE LINE"
(TOURNEUR-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Most Excellent Entertainment of Great Merit

MAURICE TOURNEUR has cleverly succeeded in placing all the high spots in his filming of the familiar story of Romany Rye. There are thrills and laughs throughout this very pleasant entertainment and it is rich in delightful sentiment and romance.

The masses and the classes will thoroughly enjoy "The Life Line," and the cast is an especially happy selection. Wallace Beery proves that he is an exceptionally versatile screen artist. This is lavishly mounted and the photography is very clear cut. It very realistically portrays a theatre fire with its consequent panic.

Locale is England, both city and countryside, and the suspense is added by the search for a lost marriage certificate. A most excellent entertainment of great merit.

Laura .....Seena Owen
Bos.....Wallace Beery
Ruth Heckett.....Pauline Stark
Joe Heckett.....Tully Marshall
Phillip Royston.....Lewis J. Cody

Story by George R. Sims.
Directed by Maurice Tourneur.
Scenario by Charles E. Whittaker.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Maurice Tourneur's Paramount-Artcraft production based on "Romany Rye" comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

"The Life Line" is the screen title and the heralded all star cast contains the names of the following well and favorably known screen artists: Jack Holt, Seena Owen, Wallace Beery, Pauline Stark, Tully Marshall and Lewis J. Cody.

The story shows Phillip Royston, master of Cragsnest, as host in a fox hunt, when he is attracted by a beautiful fortune teller in a gypsy camp. Jack Hearn, known as Romany Rye, overhears the girl's father cautioning her not to visit Royston, and when finally she visits the wealthy young man it is the Romany Rye who enters the house and brings her back to camp.

It develops that the Romany Rye is a half brother of the wealthy Royston but never claimed his share of the property as he prefers to roam. When Royston learns this he searches for the family bible which contains the marriage certificate, intending to destroy it.

But in the meantime this bible had been stolen by Joe Hecket and Bos, two London crooks. Royston and his shyster lawyer trace the thieves to their lair but are interrupted by the Romany Rye and Bos. The presence of the Romany Rye is accounted for in this particular spot by his infatuation for the daughter of Joe Hecket.

Ruth Hecket, Jack Hearn (Romany Rye) and Bos go to the theatre that night and a fire and panic brings a heroic rescue of the girl. They decide to leave for America to secure the affidavits of the witnesses to his mother's marriage so that he could claim his share in the estate as he is now desirous of having a home where he may take his love.

The burning of the ship with Royston on board and the rescue of Ruth by the Romany Rye is described as one of the biggest thrillers of the screen.

PROGRAM READER

Wealth had no appeal for the carefree Romany Rye. He was a gypsy by choice and never would claim his share of a great estate in England.

So he vowed, until he met a young girl in London and love was born. The homing instinct he thought had been forgotten had presented itself.

A terrible theatre fire with its consequent panic brought these two closer together when he rescued her. They determined to sail for America and find proof of his gypsy mother's marriage to the wealthy Englishman long since dead.

The family bible so seldom read told the tale. The certificate was there to prove his legal status as a successful claimant for the rich estate.

But two London crooks had stolen the bible. How was the Romany Rye to know that his best friends were crooks in secret and finally presented him with the bible as a token of their esteem, not knowing that it contained anything of importance to the receiver?

A moment in "The Life Line"

This was on the eve of sailing. And the ship burned with the plotter who had boarded the ship to thwart the hero. There are thrills and most beautiful sentiment in the Paramount-Artcraft attraction coming to this theatre next week.

Maurice Tourneur is the director and it is lavishly mounted. "The Life Line" is the title and it is based on George R. Sim's great novel, "Romany Rye."

Jack Holt, Pauline Stark, Wallace Beery, Senna Owen, Tully Marshall and Lewis J. Cody make up what is declared to be the strongest all star cast this successful director has ever gathered together.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this picture you should exploit it to the limit. It will stand it and you have a great many exploitation angles especially in the way of big names. When you mention Maurice Tourneur's name you should call attention to some of his former productions: "The Blue Bird," "Sporting Life" and "The White Heather." And get the brand Paramount-Artcraft Special prominent as this is well advertised.

In all this you have a great cast, each with a following: Jack Holt, Seena Owen, Wallace Beery, Pauline Stark, Tully Marshall and Lewis J. Cody. And emphasize that the story is by George R. Sims and that it is Romany Rye upon which this photoplay is adapted. Show pictures, posters and photographs depicting the several thrills such as the theatre fire and the rescue from the sinking steamship.

CATCH LINES

Through theatre fires and shipwrecks two wandering souls were brought together.

Romance injected the germ of homing instincts in the breast of the wanderer.

When he craved the carefree gypsy existence the estate meant nothing to Romany Rye.

Where the old family bible was finally opened and proved a treasure.

Love conquers all and plants the home appeal in the breast of a gypsy.

"THE WINNING STROKE"
(FOX)

College Story Offers Stunts for Walsh

IT was bound to occur to the sponsors for George Walsh that the athletic star would look decidedly appropriate in a college story. The result is he has another of his heroic roles as the stroke oar of the Yale crew. The Fox "stunter" is more successful here than in his recent pieces since the subject matter is so apropos to his personality. And the sponsors in selecting their material have hit happily upon the most picturesque event connected with a large college—the annual boat race.

Around this idea the story is woven—a story which is quite juvenile of theme since it smacks of Dick Merriwell. The hero has great odds to overcome before the big punch scene arrives. There are villains and their schemes are black. But you know George Walsh and his ability to take care of himself. In stories of this type the outcome is known from the start.

It has its compensations however, in the thrilling boat race (the genuine thing), and the stunts (some of which are new) performed by the star. And Director Dillon's action is crisp and his atmosphere suggestive of the campus.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Buck Simmons.....George Walsh
Aida Courtlandt.....Jane McAlpine
Paul Browning.....John Leslie
Burton Hampdon.....William Hayes
"Crickett" Perry.....Louis Eate
The Dean.....Mr. Woodford
"Chub" Winters.....Sidney Marion
The Head Coach.....Byron Douglas Story by Edward Sedgwick.
Scenario by Raymond Schrock.
Directed by Edward Dillon.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The athletic George Walsh will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest feature entitled "The Winning Stroke." This is a story of college life with Yale furnishing the background and it is said to be the most typical thing of its kind ever picturized. You catch the spirit, the atmosphere of the tale in more ways than one—but particularly as it concers the crew.

Here is Buck Simmons, the stroke oar, and the most popular man in college. Of course there is a jealous faction that attempts to discredit him on every occasion, but Simmons is a fighter—it is that quality which makes him such a credit to Yale. His opponents are unsuccessful until the night before the Yale-Harvard boat race when they lure him to a notorious roadhouse and so cause him to break training rules. His motive in going there is to rescue the girl he loves. Inasmuch as he is unwilling to stigmatize her good name he refuses to explain to the coach with the result that he loses his place as stroke oar. Furthermore he is charged with accepting a bribe for the purpose of throwing the race to Harvard. But at the last minute he succeeds in restoring his good name and takes his place as stroke oar. Closer and closer creeps Harvard, but Buck, by a superhuman effort, increases the stroke and Yale wins. And another victory comes to him when he takes his sweetheart into his arms.

This picture is no exception to the rule that George Walsh must supply a lot of stunts. And there are plenty here, all told. There is a genuine thrill contained in the boat race. Edward Dillon directed the picture from a story by Edward Sedgwick, the scenario being contributed by Raymond Schrock. The star has a very capable company with Jane McAlpine appearing as his leading woman.

PROGRAM READER

Make way for this picture of college life—a picture of Yale, its spirit, its atmosphere, and its athletics. A picture which will amuse you and keep you gasping at the same time. You know who the star is? Of course you do! Who else could play the athlete but George Walsh? The favorite actor's new picture is called "The Winning Stroke," which is coming to the ———theatre shortly with all its thrills and comedy. The story contains romance, pathos, stunts and sensations—everything that a Walsh picture should contain. You will see the athletic star as the stroke oar and you will follow him with the keenest interest as he fights for his good name.

How he comes back to fight, how he takes his place as stroke oar in the last minute and leads the Yale crew home as the winner over Harvard, forms a sweeping climax to a highly entertaining photoplay. You will feel like singing "Boola, Boola," and giving three long yells for Yale when you see it. That's how true it is to college life. Be sure and see it.

George Walsh is star in the Fox production, "The Winning Stroke"

CATCH LINES

Because he was the most popular man in college and a great athlete they did everything in their power to discredit him. Why did they want to put him out of the way? See Gorge Walsh in "The Winning Stroke."

They were jealous of his success so they placed temptation before him. They even tried to kill him! ! ! Why? ? ? See "The Winning Stroke" with George Walsh.

See the great boat-racing scene in "The Winning Stroke," George Walsh's new picture. You will be thrilled. Closer and closer comes the other boat but the stroke of the leading crew increases his speed and —See "The Winning Stroke."

See "The Winning Stroke"—the first great college play of its kind. It is a story of Yale, of its spirit, its athletics and atmosphere. And it has beauty, power and thrills galore. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have had good returns from the previous George Walsh pictures there is no reason why you shouldn't find the present one a pleasant investment. It is an ideal picture for the athletic star since it permits him to be a college hero. And to be the stroke oar of Yale's crew indicates that the man on the job must be thoroughly capable. You can write your copy around the role he has here and by all means bring out its college atmosphere. Tell that it is a typical tale of college life and that it concerns the big athletic events—the annual boat race between Yale and Harvard. Catch lines would be a good angle to exploit.

You can decorate your lobby in an atmospheric way through the medium of pennants and banners. And on the stage you can employ your singers to sing the favorite college songs. Play up the star as a great athlete—and that nothing is too difficult for him. And use cards announcing that scenes from the great Yale-Harvard boat race will be seen in "The Winning Stroke" which comes to the ——— next ———. There are plenty of exploitation ideas in this picture.

"WIT WINS"
(BURTON KING-HALLMARK)

A Better Than Average Picture

THIS drama of business life and frenzied finance in Wall Street has a suspensive element that forces the spectator to pay strict attention to the continuity or he will become hopelessly confused. And this same suspense is maintained throughout and will baffle the majority of patrons until the climax.

A romantic angle is provided in what at first sight seems to be the eternal triangle, and true love runs quite roughly for a time amid the stocks and bonds environment. The business rivals and the lovers finally realize a prospective happy future.

The picture is well directed and the action is rapid. Florence Billings is capably supported by a well balanced cast. The sets are very appropriate and the photography is up to standard. A better than average photoplay.

THE CAST

The Girl.....Florence Billings
The Man.....Hugh Thompson
Watts.....John Nichols
The Banker.....E. J. Ratcliffe
His Son.....Eugene Strong Produced by Burton King.
Story by Leander De Cordover.
Photography by Roy Vaughn.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Wit Wins" is scheduled for a run at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

This is a Hallmark Picture in six reels, produced by Burton King. Florence Billings is the star and both Hugh Thompson and Eugene Strong have leading roles.

The story is described as a frenzied finance theme with most of the action in Wall Street. Even in this environment true love seems to flourish. And the romance unfolded shows that sentiment can take a strong hold upon hard-headed business men on occasions.

When the dominating financier takes the girl as his private secretary he secures not only an efficient girl but a beautiful one. It is then that his son decides to take an interest in business. His father suspects that his son has suddenly become imbued with business affairs because of the striking young woman secretary he has engaged and tells him that if he intends to go into business he can do so but he does not want him about the office.

The son is unsuccessful in many deals and when some bonds are missing the guilty parties manage to successfully charge him with stealing them. In the meantime he had been visiting the charming young secretary of his father and often met his father's cashier coming out of the apartment.

He had become furiously jealous and the climax came when he discovered his sweetheart in the arms of the cashier. It is when he is accused of stealing the bonds that he begins to realize that his father's cashier and the pretty secretary are in a plot to ruin his father.

And right here is where the story becomes intensely interesting and the suspense is finally lifted. Of course the business rivals become staunch friends again as of yore. But the lovers have come over a rough road in their romance and a pleasant future is also assured for them.

The great suspensive element in this feature is what grips the spectator, according to all report.

PROGRAM READER

She told him that she loved him dearly but when he discovered her in another man's arms in her own apartment he felt naturally that his father's charming secretary had been making a fool of him.

It was only a few days later that he was accused by his father's cashier of stealing some bonds.

Then he remembered that it was this same cashier that held his sweetheart in his arms.

It was a job and a plant directed against him at the hands of an unscrupulous woman and her pal. He bitterly resented their accusations and determined to prove that this pair were trying to ruin his father through casting a stigma upon him.

But it was a hard task to proceed against this girl. For in spite of all this he loved her to distraction.

In the final denoument of this romantic story laid amid the frenzied financial environments of Wall Street he realized that a pleasant feature loomed up on the horizon for him.

"Wit Wins" is a Hallmark, with Florence Billings

Next week at this theatre this story is unfolded upon the screen. It is a Hallmark Picture directed by Burton King and starring Florence Billings.

Hugh Thompson and Eugene Strong have leading roles in the cast.

CATCH LINES

Where frenzied finance gets a dent in its hard boiled shell.

Cupid's Darts clink against the metallic ring of the financiers.

In a battle of wits for the elusive dollars, "Wit Wins."

It takes a charming woman to find the weak spots in the financial armor.

Where love storms the citadels of the mighty men of wealth and power.

Affluence surrenders to superior wits and all is well.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have booked this picture you should capitalize on the title, "Wit Wins." Display it everywhere and use the catch lines in connection. Describe it in your newspaper advertising as a romantic tale of Wall Street.

Florence Billings, Hugh Thompson and Eugene Strong each have a following and the three names should always be prominently mentioned. Burton King as a director is also known to the majority.

Any local financial deal, especially anent public service corporations, that you can tie in with, seize the opportunity. Mention the local affair which has undoubtedly received volumes of publicity and mention that in "Wit Wins" many of the secret inside financial dealings of big corporate interests are bared to the public.

"THE EGG CRATE WALLOP"
(INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Pleasing Light Comedy with Prize Fight Punch

CHARLIE RAY'S latest is slender in plot, with many sequences having little to do with the story, yet it will be accepted by Ray's followers as one of the best of his recent pictures.

The feature presents the star in another small town role, but later locates him in a city where he is substituted in a ring encounter with the villain as his opponent, the selection in a pinch being brought about because he has a "wallop" developed by his experience back home in handling eggcrates. Hence the title of the film. It is needless to relate that the "egg crate wallop" delayed somewhat for a very good prize fight, goes for a knockout and that the "hog fat" and overconfident professional is defeated not only in the fistic encounter, but also in the game of love, for Charlie has been induced to enter the ring in the hope of winning two thousand dollars, that he may go back home and clear his name of the stain of a crime which he has shouldered, as he thinks, for the sake of his sweetheart's father. The star gives an excellent performance in a characteristic made to order part and is ably supported. In construction and theme this resembles one of Ray's early hits, "The Pinch Hitter." It has not, however, the real underlying "uplift" thought nor the plausibility of the story of the last named picture.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray, the Ince-Paramount star, will be seen in his latest feature, "The Egg Crate Wallop," at the ——— theatre beginning ———. The story of this picture, by Julian Josephson, offers him the opportunity of appearing in another country boy part. Followers of Mr. Ray well realize his ability for expert characterization in this line, and his Jim Kelly is no exception to the general rule. He is absolutely human, is Charles Ray. This is assured by his performance. Indeed it can be said that he has never been anything else than delightfully human.

Jim Kelly is the assistant express agent, in love with Kitty Haskell, his employer's daughter. Now Jim has developed his biceps juggling egg crates at Pitt's Junction. A packet of money is stolen and suspicion points toward Dave Haskell, the agent. To clear his employer's name, Jim leaves town and lands a job in Chicago as sparring partner for a noted pugilist. Right here is where a simple little story becomes a pulsating drama. The climax offers the prize ring and at the last minute he substitutes for a crooked fighter and lands the victory with his "egg crate wallop." His opponent proves to be the man who stole the money—a fact which Jim discovers in an ingenious fashion. The fight lasts five furious rounds. For faithfulness of reproduction and excitement, this scene is one of the best ever screened. And so Jim wins the girl.

The story is filled with small town atmosphere and the glamour of the prize ring. It is a veritable delight both from the comedy viewpoint and the angle of human interest. Mr. Ray is ably supported by a cast headed by Colleen Moore, while a formidable array of types appear in parts of varying importance. Thomas H. Ince produced the picture for Paramount.

CATCH LINES

You wouldn't think to look at him that he could fight. But he packed an awful wallop in that good right arm—a wallop gained from lifting egg crates. And what happened? See Charles Ran in "The Egg Crate Wallop."

It's a wonderful story this "The Egg Crate Wallop," which comes to this theatre next ——— with Charles Ray. A story of the squarred ring where strong men battle for money, for fame, and for love. See it.

He was as docile as a lamb in the presence of the girl he loved, but he became a seething volcano in the squared arena, where he fought a battle against terrible odds to a victory. See "The Egg Crate Wallop."

You like a good old-fashioned prize fight? Well your chance has arrived to see one on the screen when "The Egg Crate Wallop" comes to the ——— theatre next ——— with Charles Ray as the star. The story is exciting and human and a rare treat. Don't miss it!

His opponent rained blows on his tired and battered body but he did not feel them. Why? Because his mind was set on winning. He crashed to the floor time and again but finally he delivered his wallop—but we can say no more. See the climax of "The Egg Crate Wallop," a wonderful picture

No one can fail to recognize something human about Charles Ray. In his every action there is something that reflects the spectator's own self. It may be some duplication of a pet emotion or action of a friend's but it is always human. There is nothing false about Charles Ray. The result is he is about the most popular actor on the screen. It is always a treat to Manager ——— to offer a Charles Ray picture, and it is a particular treat to be able to present "The Egg Crate Wallop," his latest Ince-Paramount picture which comes to the ——— next ———.

For in this picture Mr. Ray has a new role. True the background is the little country town again, but Jim Kelly, the character interpreted by Mr. Ray, is the assistant express agent, who gets ahead by sheer pluck and ability. How he does it is not to be divulged here. Suffice to state that it is done to the merry tune of comedy and human interest. Pretty Coleen Moore appears opposite the star. Remember the date ——— the ———.

SUGGESTIONS

"The Egg Crate Walop" offers you another chance to come through with advertising of a small town variety. Strive for atmosphere in your copy as it counts a lot in Charles Ray's pictures. Mention that the star appears in a new role here—a role which will win him all sorts of praise. Dwell upon the human touches he puts into his characters. Bring this out as much as you can. Don't let a chance go by to praise him as typifying all that is human in the awkward youth. Use catch lines liberally in your copy—the title comes in handy in that respect.

Use special decorations in your lobby scheme and get in all the atmosphere. Of course Charles Ray does not need boosting to the skies. But you can emphasize his pictures by giving them a proper atmosphere. Mention the other players and use stills of them. Mention that "The Egg Crate Wallop" is an appealing story, that it is written by Julian Josephson, the man responsible for many of the star's finest offerings, and that it is produced under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

"LORD AND LADY ALGY"
(GOLDWYN)

Aristocratic Story of Blue Bloods and Horses

R. C. CARTON'S famous play, "Lord and Lady Algy," is an exception to the general rule that a success on the stage cannot score as decisively on the screen. Presented as a photodrama, it reaches the high water mark of polite comedy, not because its dialogue is faithfully reproduced, but because its outstanding points are admirably emphasized. It is a production picture, pure and simple, and the director has taken advantage of its pictorial appeal by incorporating the correct atmosphere. It is as English as the original and while it is not cut exactly for Tom Moore's personality, still he manages to give a good account of himself.

Lord Algy is a jolly old duffer and one sympathizes with him because of his ingratiating good nature even in the face of adversity. His lordship cannot pick a winner, but her ladyship can. And when he has suffered and realized his shortcomings she magnanimously comes to the rescue. The plot verges at times towards outrageous farce, which is in its favor. And it unfolds a wealth of color and excitement in the racing scene.

In all a rich number and one calculated to interest any kind of an audience. The picture carries out an aristocracy of good taste in every department. Naomi Childers is an ideal type for Lady Algy and the remaining players are thoroughly in character.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore, supported by Naomi Childers, comes to the ——— theatre for ——— days, beginning ———, in his latest Goldwyn production, "Lord and Lady Algy" taken from the stage play of the same name which was a success twenty years ago.

An English Lord, married to a charming girl, is nevertheless held at arms length by his wife owing to his weakness for gambling. As the story opens the young Englishman has again had a tift with his wife, and the friendly relations between them were broken, owing to his having broken his promise not to bet again.

With the chivalry of the nobility the Lord permits his wife to leave him, despite that his love for her was deep. Nevertheless they keep up a bantering friendship, the girl knowing her moral aid was necessary to her husband's welfare. The old "take a chance spirit" breaks out again and the Englishman enters his horse in the Grand Derby, putting everything he had on the equine to win. His wife learns of this, learns also that another horse is by far the better, and does a little plunging on her own account—on the rival of her husband's horse.

As a prelude to the race there is a masked ball at which the already precarious relations between husband and wife are almost irreparably broken when the man becomes intoxicated and maudlin.

Next day comes the big race, Algy's horse going to the post with his entire fortune bet on it. The horse his wife had bet on, a rank outsider, wins the stake, and the personal fortune of the man is thus saved.

This really teaches him a lesson, and the two are brought together once more in happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

An excellent chance is afforded for a catching lobby display on this picture, the horse-racing scene opening many opportunities. A lobby display depicting a race track, with crowded grandstand and paddock in the back, and the horses just passing under the wire might draw, depending somewhat on the nature of the audiences.

The again subtle appeal to the curiosity of the public might be used by judicious use of posters bearing phrases such as "Can the curse of gambling in a man's blood ever be removed?" These together with a plentiful use of photographs, some excellent ones on the racing scenes and the masked ball scenes being available from the producers.

A moment from the William Fox production, "Should a Husband Forgive"

Tom Moore is a favorite in many communities, and if yours is one of those, prominent use of his name should be made. The fact also that the play has been for years a success will be remembered by the elders, should be prominently brought to attention.

PROGRAM READER

He loved his wife, yet his blood ran wild to the lure of gambling. He couldn't have both, and as a consequence he lost his wife.

With his world's possessions on his horse in the Great Derby he further widened the breach by making a fool of himself with liquor before his wife and English nobility at a grand masked ball.

She, however, with love in her heart never driven away by the multitude of broken promises of her husband, saw clearly where he was blinded with the gambling fever. She wagered heavily on a horse she knew must beat that of her husband.

His horse lost. And so he stood, apparently stripped of wealth, home and love. She, however, has saved the estate, and in the awakening he forever forswears gambling and is returned to the arms of the one he loves.

Such is the story, human and dramatic in its touches, told in the Goldwyn productions coming to this theatre next week. Tom Moore and Naomi Childers are the stars, and the picture is a version of the great stage play "Lord and Lady Algy."

CATCH LINES

Love, self respect and fortune were stolen from him by the lure of gambling.

His estranged wife, despite his broken promises and bestial conduct, saved his estate and manhood.

An Apology

¶ Motion Picture News comes to its readers this week with an apology. Because of the shut-down of the printing trades in New York City it was found impossible to publish the regular large-sized issue. Practically all publications printed in the metropolitan district several days ago definitely abandoned all hope of publishing this week—and possibly for some weeks to come.

But in order to prevent a complete interruption in our service to Motion Picture News readers we have taken emergency measures to keep you posted on the necessary developments in the industry from week to week.

The slim issue before you is an emergency one—intended to supply you with all the reviews of coming productions available at the moment of going to press, together with the valuable Complete Plan Book aid. In addition the latest release information is presented and the news of the week in bulletin form.

This issue will not be counted as part of your regular subscription—your term will be extended so as to give you the number of the issues of the regular, large-sized News for which you have contracted.

As a service to those manufacturers who found it necessary to let the trade know of their coming plans we are carrying such advertising as came to us already printed and ready for binding.

In closing, while once more tendering an apology, allow us to assure you most emphatically that, should the unsettled printing conditions continue, Motion Picture News will make every possible effort to maintain its service of news, reviews and Plan Book aid.

We will stand by you to the best of our ability—and in return we ask your indulgence for the short-comings forced upon us by conditions.

"THE LIFE LINE"

(TOURNEUR-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Most Excellent Entertainment of Great Merit

MAURICE TOURNEUR has cleverly succeeded in placing all the high spots in his filming of the familiar story of Romany Rye. There are thrills and laughs throughout this very pleasant entertainment and it is rich in delightful sentiment and romance.

The masses and the classes will thoroughly enjoy "The Life Line," and the cast is an especially happy selection. Wallace Beery proves that he is an exceptionally versatile screen artist. This is lavishly mounted and the photography is very clear cut. It very realistically portrays a theatre fire with its consequent panic.

Locale is England, both city and countryside, and the suspense is aided by the search for a lost marriage certificate. A most excellent entertainment of great merit.

THE CAST

Jack Hearn, the Romany Rye ..... Jack Holt
Laura ..... Seena Owen
Bos ..... Wallace Beery
Ruth Heckett ..... Pauline Stark
Joe Heckett ..... Tully Marshall
Phillip Royston ..... Lewis J. Cody

Story by George R. Sims.
Directed by Maurice Tourneur.
Scenario by Charles E. Whittaker.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Maurice Tourneur's Paramount-Artcraft production based on "Romany Rye" comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning ————.

"The Life Line" is the screen title and the heralded all-star cast contains the names of the following well and favorably known screen artists: Jack Holt, Seena Owen, Wallace Beery, Pauline Stark, Tully Marshall and Lewis J. Cody.

The story shows Phillip Royston, master of Cragsnest, as host in a fox hunt, when he is attracted by a beautiful fortune teller in a gypsy camp. Jack Hearn, known as Romany Rye, overhears the girl's father cautioning her not to visit Royston, and when finally she visits the wealthy young man it is the Romany Rye who enters the house and brings her back to camp.

It develops that the Romany Rye is a half brother of the wealthy Royston but never claimed his share of the property, as he prefers to roam. When Royston learns this he searches for the family bible, which contains the marriage certificate, intending to destroy it.

But in the meantime this bible has been stolen by Joe Hecket and Bos, two London crooks. Royston and his shyster lawyer trace the thieves to their lair but are interrupted by the Romany Rye and Bos. The presence of the Romany Rye is accounted for in this particular spot by his infatuation for the daughter of Joe Hecket.

Ruth Hecket, Jack Hearn (Romany Rye) and Bos go to the theatre that night and a fire and panic brings a heroic rescue of the girl. They decide to leave for America to secure the affidavits of the witnesses to his mother's marriage so that he could claim his share in the estate, as he is now desirous of having a home where he might like his love.

The burning of the ship with Royston on board and the rescue of Ruth by the Romany Rye is described as one of the biggest thrillers of the screen.

PROGRAM READER

Wealth had no appeal for the carefree Romany Rye. He was a gypsy by choice and never would claim his share of a great estate in England.

So he vowed until he met a young girl in London and love was born. The homing instinct he thought had been forgotten had presented itself.

A terrible theatre fire with its consequent panic brought these two closer together when he reseued her. They determined to sail for America and find proofs of his gypsy mother's marriage to the wealthy Englishman, long since dead.

The family bible, so seldom read, told the tale. The certificate was there to prove his legal status as a successful claimant for the rich estate.

But two London crooks had stolen the bible. How was the Romany Rye to know that his best friends were crooks in secret and finally presented him with the bible as a token of their esteem, not knowing that it contained anything of importance to the receiver?

This was on the eve of sailing. And the ship burned with the plotter, who had boarded the ship to thwart the hero. There are thrills and most beautiful sentiment in the Paramount-Artcraft attraction coming to this theatre next week.

Maurice Tourneur is the director and it is lavishly mounted. "The Life Line" is the title and it is based on George R. Sim's great novel, "Romany Rye."

Jack Holt, Pauline Stark, Wallace Beery, Seena Owen, Tully Marshall and Lewis J. Cody make up what is declared to be the strongest all-star cast this successful director has ever gathered together.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this picture you should exploit it to the limit. It will stand it and you have a great many exploitation angles, especially in the way of big names. When you mention Maurice Tourneur's name you should call attention to some of his former productions: "The Blue Bird," "Sporting Life" and "The White Heather." And get the brand Paramount-Artcraft Special prominent as this is well advertised.

In all this you have a great cast, each with a following: Jack Holt, Seena Owen, Wallace Beery, Pauline Stark, Tully Marshall and Lewis J. Cody. And emphasize that the story is by George R. Sims and that it is Romany Rye upon which this story photoplay is adapted. Show pictures, posters and photographs depicting the several thrills such as the theatre fire and the rescue from the sinking steamship.

CATCH LINES

Through theatre fires and shipwrecks two wandering souls were brought together.

Romance injected the germ of homing instincts in the breast of the wanderer.

When he craved the carefree gypsy existence the estate meant nothing to Romany Rye.

Where the old family bible was finally opened and proved a treasure.

Love conquers all and plants the home appeal in the breast of a gypsy.

"THE BRUTE BREAKER"

(UNIVERSAL)

Active Melodrama of Lumber Camps

THIS one very realistically portrays a succession of fights among the Canadian lumberjacks in the North woods. Scenically and for thrills it has many high spots, such as shooting the rapids in a canoe and the escape from the burning forest.

The story is built around heroics with a love element injected. To blase picture fans it may seem far fetched at times but it possesses the quality of being different from ordinary and after a long run of light society dramas this brisk activity should undoubtedly prove a welcome relief as an entertainer.

Direction is very good and for this sort of picture it is well cast. Photography is excellent. An active melodrama of the lumber camps.

THE CAST

Baptiste Navet ..... Harry Northrup
Louis Granteire ..... Frank Mayo
Annette Bosseut ..... Kathryn Adams
Little Jean ..... Burwell Hamerick
Her Father ..... Jack Curtis
Le Blanc ..... Bert Sprotte
Norres ..... Frank Brownlee
Pierre ..... Charles Le Moyne

Story by Johnston McCulley.
Scenario by Dorothy Barrett and Lynn Reynolds.
Directed by Lynn Reynolds.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Brute Breaker" is the title of the Universal picture coming to the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning next ————.

Frank Mayo, Harry Northrup and Kathryn Adams have the leading role in this gripping drama of the North Woods.

Louis Granteire becomes lord and master of a vast woodland principality of the North Woods after the death of his father and is determined to eradicate the immoral element from his domain.

He found that Le Blanc in one camp was a brute and in another camp he discovered Norres, a squaw man. And at the third camp he found that Pierre was worse than the two former brutes combined. Disguised as a lumberjack he meets them individually in fair combat and defeats them.

But the three bullies are determined that collectively they can subdue him and plan revenge. When the hero meets Annette, the pretty daughter of the Factor, she refused to dance with him as she considered him a brute because of his fighting abilities. But he forces her to dance by main strength.

Baptiste Navet heard of the thrashing that the hero had administered to the three bullies and determined to prove that he alone was the hully of his particular camp. He planned a trap for the hero but the four bullies combined did not prove a match for Louis Granteire.

Shooting the rapids in a canoe and hundreds of other thrills are said to be provided in this picture depicting the efforts made by the four bullies to oust the hero of the North Woods.

When Annette is in great danger from Navet, who practically runs amuck and sets fire to a village, she seeks refuge with the hero and he saves her and thwarts the bad men. And she finds that in spite of the fact that she once told him that she hated him that she now loves him.

Her father appears on the scene and recognizes the lumberjack hero as the real owner of the big section of the North Woods. And the hero had accomplished his work and had also won a wife.

PROGRAM READER

He forced her to dance with him against her will and she furiously told him that she hated him.

The girl was the pretty daughter of the factor in this rough lumber camp of the North Woods.

She had heard all about the brute who had compelled her to dance with him by main strength.

According to report he had worked in three different camps and had been the aggressor in as many fierce fights for the supremacy of the woods.

Rough lumberjacks did not appeal to her anyway and this one in particular seemed to be such a brute.

Can you imagine that within a few short months this girl would love this same man to distraction?

There are thrills and romance in the story unfolded on the screen of this theatre next week.

It is a Universal picture entitled "The Brute Breaker" and is a hardy outdoor photoplay.

Frank Mayo, Harry Northrup and Kathryn Adams are three of the leading artists in the production, which is a gripping story of the North Woods.

SUGGESTIONS

After you book this picture the best exploitation appeal will be the fact that it is a thrilling romance of the Great North Woods, an outdoor melodrama with the punch. The names of Frank Mayo, Harry Northrup and Kathryn Adams should be used often announcing them as the three principal artists in a special cast. For lobby display, anything can be used that is suggestive of lumber camps. The title, "The Brute Breaker," signifies action and should be used on every occasion, of course. One of the big scenes is the forest fire and as there are fires of this kind raging at some part of the country at all times apparently, the announcement that a big forest fire is portrayed in this picture may be a help as a drawing card.

CATCH LINES

The brute breaker forced her to dance with him by main strength.

He ousted the bully of the camp and then proceeded to the next camp.

It was always clean-up day when the brute breaker struck a new camp.

Romance lurks even among the bullies of the Great North Woods.

When the girl and the brute came safely through the forest fire they realized true love.

Thrills and romance combine in the great outdoors.

"THE EGG CRATE WALLOP"

(INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Pleasing Light Comedy With Prize Fight Punch

CHARLIE RAY'S latest is slender in plot with many sequences having little to do with the story, yet it will be accepted by Ray's followers as one of the best of his recent pictures.

The feature presents the star in another small town role but later locates him in a city where he is substituted in a ring encounter with the villain as his opponent, the selection in a pinch being brought about because he has a "wallop" developed by his experience back home in handling egg crates. Hence the title of the film.

It is needless to relate that the "egg crate wallop," delayed somewhat for a very good prize fight, goes for a knockout and that the "hog fat" and over confident professional is defeated not only in the fistic encounter but also in the game of love, for Charlie has been induced to enter the ring in the hope of winning two thousand dollars that he may go back home and clear his name of the stain which he has shouldered, as he thinks, for the sake of his sweetheart's father.

The star gives an excellent performance in a characteristic, made-to-order part and is ably supported. In construction and theme this resembles one of Ray's early hits, "The Pinch Hitter." It has not, however, the real underlying "uplift" thought nor the plausibility of the story of the last named picture.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray, the Ince-Paramount star, will be seen in his latest feature, "The Egg Crate Wallop," at the ———— theatre beginning ————. The story of this picture, by Julian Josephson, offers him the opportunity of appearing in another country boy part. Followers of Mr. Ray well realize his ability for expert characterization in this line, and his Jim Kelly is no exception to the general rule. He is absolutely human, is Charles Ray. This is assured by his performance. Indeed it can be said that he has never been anything else than delightfully human.

Jim Kelly is the assistant express agent, in love with Kitty Haskell, his employer's daughter. Now Jim has developed his biceps juggling egg crates at Pitts Junction. A packet of money is stolen and suspicion points toward Dave Haskell, the agent. To clear his employer's name, Jim leaves town and lands a job in Chicago as sparring partner for a noted pugilist. Right here is where a simple little story becomes a pulsating drama. The climax offers the prize ring and at the last minute he substitutes for a crooked fighter and lands the victory with his "egg crate wallop." His opponent proves to be the man who stole the money—a fact which Jim discovers in an ingenious fashion. The fight lasts five furious rounds. For faithfulness of reproduction and excitement, this scene is one of the best ever screened. And so Jim wins the girl.

The story is filled with small town atmosphere and the glamour of the prize ring. It is a veritable delight both from the comedy viewpoint and the angle of human interest. Mr. Ray is ably supported by a cast headed by Colleen Moore, while a formidable array of types appear in parts of varying importance. Thomas H. Ince produced the picture for Paramount.

CATCH LINES

You wouldn't think to look at him that he could fight. But he packed an awful wallop in that good right arm—a wallop gained from lifting egg crates. And what happened? See Charles Ray in "The Egg Crate Wallop?"

It's a wonderful story, this "The Egg Crate Wallop," which comes to this theatre next ———— with Charles Ray. A story of the squared ring where strong men battle for money, for fame, and for love. See it.

He was as docile as a lamb in the presence of the girl he loved, but he became a seething volcano in the squared arena, where he fought a battle against terrible odds to a victory. See "The Egg Crate Wallop."

You like a good old fashioned prize fight? Well your chance has arrived to see one on the screen when "The Egg Crate Wallop" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Charles Ray as the star. The story is exciting and human and a rare treat. Don't miss it!

His opponent rained blows on his tired and battered body but he did not feel them. Why? Because his mind was set on winning. He crashed to the floor time and again but finally he delivered his wallop—but we can say no more. See the climax of "The Egg Crate Wallop," a wonderful picture.

PROGRAM READER

No one can fail to recognize something human about Charles Ray. In his every action there is something that reflects the spectator's own self. It may be some duplication of a pet emotion or action of a friend's, but it is always human. There is nothing false about Charles Ray. The result is he is about the most popular actor on the screen. It is always a treat to Manager ———— to offer a Charles Ray picture, and it is a particular treat to be able to present "The Egg Crate Wallop," his latest Ince-Paramount picture, which comes to the ———— next ————.

For in this picture Mr. Ray has many a new role. True, the background is the little country town again, but Jim Kelly, the character interpreted by Mr. Ray, is the assistant express agent, who gets ahead by sheer pluck and ability. How he does it is not to be divulged here. Suffice to state that it is done to the merry tune of comedy and human interest. Pretty Colleen Moore appears opposite the star. Remember the date, ———— the ————.

SUGGESTIONS

"The Egg Crate Wallop" offers you another chance to come through with advertising of a small town variety. Strive for atmosphere in your copy as it counts a lot in Charles Ray's pictures. Mention that the star appears in a new role here—a role which will win him all sorts of praise. Dwell upon the human touches he puts into his characters. Bring this out as much as you can. Don't let a chance go by to praise him as typifying all that is human in the awkward youth. Use catch lines liberally in your copy—the title comes in handy in that respect.

Use special decorations in your lobby scheme and get in all the atmosphere. Of course Charles Ray does not need boosting to the skies. But you can emphasize his pictures by giving them a proper atmosphere. Mention the other players and use stills of them. Mention that "The Egg Crate Wallop" is an appealing story, that it is written by Julian Josephson, the man responsible for many of the star's finest offerings, and that it is produced under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

"THE OAKDALE AFFAIR"

Photographic Appeal Uplifts Familiar Story

ALTHOUGH the title of this picture suggests a myste melodrama there is nothing about its contents which del solution even from the very start. The theme is a famili one on the screen, since it presents the overworked idea of a gi who bursts the bonds of her environment in order to find roman in her own way disguised as a young man. And just as famili is the development wherein the would-be-husband, traveling inco nito as a tramp, wins the girl.

It is astonishing how the heroine comes through unscathed whe one considers her association with underworld thugs, gypsies an types far removed from her select circles. The plot hinges upon th anxiety she causes her father and the chief interest is derived i watching Evelyn Greeley's efforts to appear at ease in masculin disguise. There is a bid for a melodramatic climax when an unrul mob would lynch the girl for a supposed murder.

But incredulous as the story is it seems like a bit of reality con pared with the characterization. No girl can successfully hide he sex over an extended period. However, Miss Greeley makes better job of it than is usually seen. The picture has its inte esting points which are realized in its spontaneous action, it adventurous spirit and its colorful photography. Oscar Apfe always a good director, has brought out its high lights to advantage —Length, 5 reels.—Released October 6.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Evelyn Greeley, the World Film star, will be seen in her latest photoplay entitled "The Oakdale Affair," at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. This story is written by Edgar Rice Burroughs, the author of "Tarzan of the Apes," and it affords Miss Greeley a role which is ideal for her personality. As Gail Prim, a rich young heiress, who in her search for adventure dons the garb of a boy and palms herself off to a band of tramps as a notorious crook, the star creates a character that will long be remembered by her many admirers.

Gail does not have a happy time in her home and her stepmother encourages her to run away by selecting her future husband. But little does the girl know that the happy-go-lucky tramp, Reginald Paynter, whom she meets on the road, is her stepmother's choice. He reveals his identity eventually and says the reason for assuming the garb of a tramp was to study the character for a novel. Gail no sooner leaves the house before she encounters adventure. She joins a gang who think that she is the "Oskaloosa Kid," a noted criminal. A ghost incident follows when she finds herself in a haunted house, and then she joins a party of gypsies and eventually is arrested and placed in jail, where she is accused of killing Miss Prim—herself!

The mob is about to break into jail and hang her and her pal when her father arrives and saves her. And the joke is on her when she learns that the companion is the very chap her relatives want her to marry. The strange consequences of her escapades are graphically depicted in the five reels of "The Oakdale Affair." Mr. Burroughs is never conventional in his writings and in the present story he has evolved a tale which fairly teems with originality and action.

Was she murdered Her jewels were missing and the police an her relatives searched everywhere for he in vain. And no trace of her! Wher was she? Yet a few miles away in a quie village jail "The Oskaloosa Kid" was im prisoned. He had just been arrested fo the murder of Miss Prim. The mob de cided to raid the jail and hang the prisoner And guess who "The Oskaloosa Kid" is Why the missing girl! Disguised as a crook she had been roaming the countryside as a crook.

Why did she do it? How did she do it? We cannot go into details for that would be spoiling the story for you. But suffice to say that if you come to the ———— theatre next ———— afternoon and evening you will find out for yourself You will see a picture full of thrills, ad venture and romance. You will see the charming Evelyn Greeley in "The Oakdale Affair."

SUGGESTIONS

This is a subject which from title to contents offers you unusual advertising possibilities. In the first place the title is alluring and suggests a mystery melodrama, which it is to some extent. Feature it in a mysterious vein, although you can give the plot in brief outline. State that the charming Evelyn Greeley appears disguised in masculine attire. Then ask your patrons why she adopted this disguise and where it led her? This will arouse their curiosity. Make mention of the author's name. Edgar Rice Burroughs is the author of "Tarzan of the Apes." So mention what he has done in all your copy.

Make mention that Miss Greeley presents a likely figure as a boy and use stills of her in boyish costume. Play up the members of the large cast. The players are all familiar to your fan patronage. Treat the story as a mystery melodrama with a vein of comedy to give it balance. Play up the romance, the adventure, the spirit. Then you have the big advertising punch of the story when the heroine finds herself in jail for the murder of herself. This is unusual. So concentrate upon it. Use our program reader in your copy.

"THE HELLION"

(AMERICAN-PATHE)

Margarita Fisher Shines in Mediocre Offering

IT is difficult to classify Margarita Fisher's latest picture, "The Hellion." One cannot call it an uplifting piece of screen dramaturgy since it carries no thought or message, nor, on the other hand, can it enter the realm of entertainment. It has achieved one object, however: it presents Miss Fisher as an actress of parts. No more can one call her a mere comedienne, for she has shown enough emotional capabilities to warrant her being presented occasionally in strictly dramatic roles. Her dual study of an insane girl and one whose mind is completely balanced merits the highest praise in its differentiation.

But the plot? Well it is something else entirely. It is not only improbable, but impossible. No parents would be so inhuman, so lacking in the finer sensibilities as to secrete their daughter from the man she loves and palm off another who resembles her merely for the sake of the money which he will bring into the house. And sympathy cannot be extended to the lover when he admits in the climax that he is aware of the deception all along and acknowledges it with intense devotion for a girl who has never meant anything to him.

The story is positively uncanny of theme. The characterization is at fault and the thing doesn't ring true for an instant. Being hopelessly old-fashioned, it will only appeal to those whose education is exceedingly limited and whose taste is not at all cultivated. It is not the sort of entertainment one expects in this modern day. A capable cast renders good assistance.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Margarita Fisher, the American star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture production entitled "The Hellion." This is based upon a story by Daniel F. Whitcomb, and awards the star the dual role of an insane girl and one whose mind is evently balanced. Joseph Harper's daughter has been pronounced incurahly insane. The betrothed of George Graham, who was reported killed in action during the war, she brooded so over the fact that her mind gave way. But Graham wasn't killed and eventually he returned home to seek his fiancee.

But a telegram announcing his expected visit never reached the girl for her parents saw to it that a substitute must be found who resembled their daughter. Their motive was to keep the young man in the family since he was possessed of considerable wealth. So when he reached the Harper home he was happy to see who he thought was his fiancee, but who in reality was Mazie Del Mar, a cabaret dancer. Now Mazie had grown tired of her life on the dancing floor, so when Harper urged her to accept his proposition she gladly accepted. But a change came over her when she discovered the sincerity of her future husband and she would willingly have given up her deception.

The insane girl expired in one of her violent moments. Which of course gave the parents a clear path for the fulfilment of their scheme. And when Mazie, unable to carry on her deception any longer, imparted the fact that she was not related to the Harpers, Graham told her he was aware of it all along. He knew that the other girl was incurably insane and made the best of his love affair. Miss Fisher gives a splendid study of the dual role and she receives capable assistance from a cast headed by Emory Johnson. The picture was produced under the direction of George L. Cox.

CATCH LINES

She was eager to get away from her cabaret life and she gladly accepted the home of a man and became his daughter. What came of it? See Margarita Fisher in "The Hellion."

Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and see Margarita Fisher in her greatest triumph, "The Hellion." The star has a powerful role in a powerful subject.

The story of a girl who gave up her cabaret life to pose as a gay deceiver. You will be entertained—you will be thrilled—you will be moved. "The Hellion" is a big picture and no mistake.

Margarita Fisher in a drama the like of which has never been seen on the screen. See this fascinating actress in her greatest role—a role far removed from anything she has ever attempted.

They wanted to keep the young man in the family but they knew that he would be lost if he discovered that their daughter was insane. So they found a substitute. What came of it? See Margarita Fisher in "The Hellion."

They thought they were deceiving him but he fooled them in the end. And he liked their scheme so well that he gladly became their son-in-law. What is it? You will find out in "The Hellion" when it comes to this theatre next ——— with Margarita Fisher as the star.

PROGRAM READER

Something new under the sun will be presented at the ——— theatre next ——— when the American star, Margarita Fisher, appears in her newest offering, "The Hellion." You, who think there is a familiarity about screen stories, are in for a happy surprise, for here is something DIFFERENT. You have seen Miss Fisher in light comedy roles. Well, your chance has arrived to see her in an emotional part. Quite a departure for her, isn't it? But she comes through with flying colors. She appears in a dual role—a girl who is insane and one whose mind is balanced.

Now it is not our plan to reveal the plot of this most interesting story—that would be robbing the interest. But suffice to say that you will be royally entertained for you will see a unique plot, rich characterization and splendid acting. How the dancer becomes a gay deceiver and discovers her soul is told in a remarkable array of dramatic events. Come and be convinced that there is something new under the sun. It is a picture you will long remember.

SUGGESTIONS

You can't bank much on the title of this picture, so don't concentrate upon it. Simply go in for the star and the wonderful performance she gives in a dramatic role. Bring out her versatility and tell that she has been formerly identified with comedies but that now she will surprise you with her emotional capabilities. Announce her past successes. Then play up the story as something absolutely unique. Don't give away the plot—there are some things in it that might shock the sensitive patrons. Tell that it is a powerful study of the awakening of a girl's soul—a girl who has never had a chance. Tell that

"LORD AND LADY ALGY"

(GOLDWYN)

Society Story of Blue Bloods and Horses

H. C. CARTON'S famous play, "Lord and Lady Algy," proves an exception to the general rule that what is successful on the stage cannot score as decisively on the screen. In fact, the silent version is an excellent adaptation of the original if one considers the elimination of the dialogue. It is a production picture pure and simple, since it counts heavily upon its atmosphere for success. You may call it director proof because the man in charge is only compelled to emphasize its high lights with no plot elaborations. And he has kept it as English as the original.

The picture just about reaches the high water mark of polite comedy and strikes us as the best thing of its kind ever screened. And while Tom Moore is not the exact type for Lord Algy, still he manages to give an excellent account of himself. The play does not burden you with any plot complications but simply paints a quaint and humorous study of marital incompatability.

The picture unfolds a variety of rich scenes—one in particular, the racing scene, being a gem of its kind. It verges at times towards outrageous farce, which is in its favor. The outstanding points are its color, atmosphere and spirit and they are incorporated with an aristocracy of good taste. Naomi Childers makes a personable figure as Lady Algy, and, at all times, looks and acts like the English gentlewoman.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore, supported by Naomi Childers, comes to the ——— theatre for ——— days, beginning ———, in his latest Goldwyn production, "Lord and Lady Algy," taken from the stage play of the same name which was a success twenty years ago.

An English lord, married to a charming girl, is nevertheless held at arms' length by his wife owing to his weakness for gambling. As the story opens the young Englishman has again had a tilt with his wife, and the friendly relations between them were broken, owing to his having broken his promise not to bet again.

With the chivalry of the nobility the lord permits his wife to leave him, despite that his love for her was deep. Nevertheless they keep up a bantering friendship, the girl knowing her moral aid was necessary to her husband's welfare. The old "take a chance spirit" breaks out again and the Englishman enters his horse in the Grand Derby, putting everything he had on the equine to win. His wife learns of this, learns also that another horse is by far the better, and does a little plunging on her own account—on the rival of her husband's horse.

As a prelude to the race there is a masked hall, at which the already precarious relations between husband and wife are almost irreparably broken, when the man becomes intoxicated and maudlin.

Next day comes the big race, Algy's horse going to the post with his entire fortune het on it. The horse his wife had bet on, a rank outsider, wins the stake, and the personal fortune of the man is thus saved.

This really teaches him a lesson, and the two are brought together once more in happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

An excellent chance is afforded for a catching lobby display on this picture, the horseracing scene opening many opportunities. A lobby display depicting a race track, with crowded grandstand and paddock in the back, and the horses just passing under the wire, might draw, depending somewhat on the nature of your audience.

Then again subtle appeal to the curiosity of the public might be used by judicious use of posters bearing phrases such as "Can the curse of gambling in a man's blood ever be removed?" These, together with a plentiful use of photographs, some excellent ones on the racing scenes and the masked ball scenes being available from the producers.

Tom Moore is a favorite in many communities, and if yours is one of those, prominent use of his name should be made. The fact also that the play has been for years a success will be remembered by the elders, should he prominently brought to attention.

PROGRAM READER

He loved his wife, yet his blood ran wild to the lure of gambling. He couldn't have both, and as a consequence he lost his wife.

With his world's possessions on his horse in the Great Derby, he further widened the breach by making a fool of himself with liquor before his wife and English nobility at a grand masked ball.

She, however, with love in her heart never driven away by the multitude of broken promises of her husband, saw clearly where he was blinded with the gambling fever. She wagered heavily on a horse she knew must beat that of her husband.

His horse lost. And so he stood, apparently stripped of wealth, home and love. She, however, has saved the estate, and in the awakening he forever forswears gambling and is returned to the arms of the one he loves.

Such is the story, human and dramatic in its touches, told in the Goldwyn production coming to this theatre next week. Tom Moore and Naomi Childers are the stars, and the picture is a version of the great stage play, "Lord and Lady Algy."

CATCH LINES

Love, self-respect and fortune were stolen from him by the lure of gambling.

His estranged wife, despite his broken promises and bestial conduct, saved his estate and manhood.

Nobility, after all, finds that so far as temptation and love go, it is just as human as the so-called ordinary folk.

Do you think you can "beat" the races, the cards, the wheel—your blood inheritance? And have you a wife strong enough to save you?

Miss Fisher has a following, so play up her name to the limit. Run stories about her career and that she has entertained millions of picture fans. Advertise the picture as a strong, vital entertainment the kind of entertainment that will live in the memory. But your best point is to play up the star and her capabilities. Run stills of her and distribute her name in every possible space.

"THE WINNING STROKE"

(FOX)

College Story Offers Stunts for Walsh

IT was bound to occur to the sponsors for George Walsh that the athletic star would look decidedly appropriate in a college story. The result is he has another of his heroic roles as the stroke oar of the Yale crew. The Fox "stunter" is more successful here than in his recent pieces since the subject matter is so apropos to his personality. And the sponsors in selecting their material have hit happily upon the most picturesque event connected with a large college—the annual boat-race.

Around this idea the story is woven—a story which is quite juvenile of theme, since it smacks of Dick Merriwell. The hero has great odds to overcome before the big punch scene arrives. There are villains and their schemes are black. But you know George Walsh and his ability to take care of himself. In stories of this type the outcome is known from the start.

It has its compensations, however, in the thrilling boat-race (the genuine thing) and the stunts (some of which are new) performed by the star. And Director Dillon's action is crisp and his atmosphere suggestive of the campus. Length, 5 reels.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The athletic George Walsh will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest feature entitled "The Winning Stroke." This is a story of college life with Yale furnishing the backgrounds and it is said to be the most typical thing of its kind ever pictured. You catch the spirit, the atmosphere of this tale in more ways than one—but particularly as it concerns the crew.

Here is Buck Simmons, the stroke oar, and the most popular man in college. Of course there is a jealous faction that attempts to discredit him on every occasion, but Simmons is a fighter—it is that quality which makes him a credit to Yale. His opponents are unsuccessful until the night before the Yale-Harvard boat race, when they lure him to a notorious roadhouse and so cause him to break training rules. His motive in going there is to rescue the girl he loves. Inasmuch as he is unwilling to stigmatize her good name, he refuses to explain to the coach, with the result that he loses his place as stroke oar. Furthermore, he is charged with accepting a bribe for the purpose of throwing the race to Harvard. But at the last minute he succeeds in restoring his good name and takes his place as stroke oar. Closer and closer creeps Harvard, but Buck, by a superhuman effort, increases the stroke and Yale wins. And another victory comes to him when he takes his sweetheart into his arms.

This picture is no exception to the rule that George Walsh must supply a lot of stunts. And there are plenty here, all told. There is a genuine thrill contained in the boat race. Edward Dillon directed the picture from a story by Edward Sedgwick, the scenario being contributed by Raymond Schrock. The star has a very capable company with Jane McAlpine appearing as his leading woman.

CATCH LINES

Because he was the most popular man in college and a great athlete, they did everything in their power to discredit him. Why did they want to put him out of the way? See George Walsh in "The Winning Stroke."

It was the hour of the great boat race and Yale should win with Simmons as the stroke oar. But he was absent, which made Harvard look like the victor. What came of it all? Did Yale win? See "The Winning Stroke."

George Walsh, the athlete — George Walsh, the performer of hazardous feats, will come to the ——— next ——— in "The Winning Stroke." See this picture of college life and enjoy the star in a new role.

PROGRAM READER

Make way for this picture of college life—a picture of Yale, its spirit, its atmosphere, and its athletics. A picture which will amuse you and keep you gasping at the same time. You know who the star is? Of course you do! Who else could play the athlete but George Walsh? The favorite actor's new picture is called "The Winning Stroke," which is coming to the ——— theatre shortly with all its thrills and comedy. The story contains romance, pathos, stunts and sensations—everything that a Walsh picture should contain. You will see the athletic star as the stroke oar and you will follow him with the keenest interest as he fights for his good name.

How he comes back to fight, how he takes his place as stroke oar in the last minute and leads the Yale crew home as the winner over Harvard, forms a sweeping climax to a highly entertaining photoplay. You will feel like singing "Boola, Boola," and giving three long yells for Yale when you see it. That's how true it is to college life. Be sure and see it.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have had good returns from the previous George Walsh pictures there is no reason why you shouldn't find the present one a pleasant investment. It is an ideal picture for the athletic star, since it permits him to be a college hero. And to be the stroke oar of Yale's crew indicates that the man on the job must be thoroughly capable. You can write your copy around the role he has here and by all means bring out its college atmosphere. Tell that it is a typical tale of college life and that it concerns the big athletic event—the annual boat race between Yale and Harvard. Catch lines would be a good angle to exploit.

You can decorate your lobby in an atmospheric way through the medium of pennants and banners. And on the stage you can employ your singers to sing the favorite college songs. Play up the star as a great athlete—and that nothing is too difficult for him. And use cards announcing that scenes from the great Yale-Harvard boat race will be seen in "The Winning Stroke," which comes to the ——— next ———. There are plenty of exploitation ideas in this picture.

A Unique Novelty That Will Register

AN out of the ordinary film production occupying a field al its own. It is a unique novelty and while presenting a dramatic story realistically it also possesses great valu scenically and is naturally entertaining because of the great array of animals used: lions, bears, deers, porcupine, wildcats and, last but not least, the Great Dane, a dog of marvelous intelligence.

The cast is well balanced and the continuity is favored with the suspensive element, but easy to follow. Direction and photography are very good and there are many thrills augmented by several tense periods.

This picture should have a wide appeal and prove especially acceptable to all lovers of animals and particularly captivating to children. Locale is generally amid Alaskan snows and ice with a sympathetic love element in the story which will register generally.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and greatly pleasing: Elite, good puller and very pleasing: Family, strong puller and greatly pleasing: Labor, good puller and very pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.—Released September 28.—Tom Hamlin.

Story by James Oliver Curwood.
Produced by Curwood-Carver Company.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

James Oliver Curwood's famous magazine story, "Wapi, the Walrus," has been screened as "Back to God's Country" and this First National Attraction comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

An unknown element is said to be introduced in very novel form by the picturing of bears, lions, deer, porcupines, wolves and wildcats. On shipboard in the frozen North and dog sledges across the deep snow trails are also features of this dramatic story.

Nell Shipman is the star and Wheeler Oakman, Wellington Playter and Charles Arling are in the cast. The great Dane is a marvelously intelligent dog as "Wapi," the killer.

In the northern wilds of Canada lives Dolores and her father and she has grown up among the semi-savage beasts of the field and woods and has made great pets of them. She meets Peter, a government investigator, and they fall in love. After her father's death at the hands of a desperado, a renegade vessel captain who has temporarily journeyed inland to hide from the officers, she marries Peter and they set sail for the far north on his government mission of investigating the Eskimo.

Rydell, the renegade sea captain who killed her father, is master of the vessel and after wounding her husband he tries to force his attentions upon her but is successfully repulsed. The villain's partner in the far north has a savage dog which he constantly heats and keeps chained. It is called Wapi, the killer.

When the young wife pleads for a dog team to take her husband overland to a surgeon she is refused. Her wonderful love for wild animals stands her in good stead when she wins over the Great Dane. For when they finally determine to give her a dog team for herself and another for her husband she suspects foul play is contemplated and escapes with her husband on one sledge. In the mad chase with the villain after her the Great Dane breaks loose from his chain and harrassed the pursuer so successfully that she was able to make her way with her sick husband to civilization.

PROGRAM READER

Fifty-two degrees below zero on a dog sledge racing across trackless wastes of snow and ice.

This is a terrible situation for a girl.

And it was especially serious in this particular instance. For there was another sledge racing along a few miles behind.

The second sledge contained a renegade sea captain who is pursuing her.

Things looked perilous for the girl when suddenly a dark form loomed up beside her. It was the Great Dane, the savage brute kept chained by its brutal master.

This girl, however, had been brought up in the wilds and had a great love for all animals. Only a few days before she had been the only human being to ever venture close enough to caress "Wapi, the Killer." And Wapi had just broken his chains when he found that this girl was in trouble.

He was not there to harm her. He wanted to save her from her pursuer. She pointed back and cried, "Sic 'em, Wapi," and the Great Dane did the rest. He raced back and bravely tackled the entire dog team of the villainous pursuer.

Lions, lynx, wildcats, bears, etc., are prominently pictured in the great James Oliver Curwood story appearing at this theatre in screen form next week.

It is a First National Attraction. "Back to God's Country," and a stirring story of the far north.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture there are many big exploitations angles you can use to good effect. The fact that James Oliver Curwood wrote the story and that Hearst's "Cosmopolitan" and "Good Housekeeping" are using his stories. And Nell Shipman should always be mentioned as the star so that you can get attention from her following.

Always mention that this is a First National Attraction as this brand means something to a great many people. Outside of all this the fact that the actual picture was made on locations in the far north should be emphasized. And don't forget to use a large display of photographs showing the many semi-wild animals appearing in the picture. And mention the number of ferocious animals used in all your advertising, not forgetting the Great Dane, "Wapi, the Killer."

CATCH LINES

Where one girl makes pets of the wild beasts of the woods and the birds of the air.

And a savage "throw-back" half-wolf finally uses the sole remaining spark of loyal dog instinct and defeats a scoundrel.

Fifty-two degrees below zero on a dog sledge and pursued by a renegade was the lot of one young girl.

On a vessel in the far north, frozen in by ice and snow and surrounded by Eskimo, gaunt dogs and bad men.

She felt safer when she was among the wild animals further south because she knew she could trust them.

"WIT WINS"

(BURTON KING-HALLMARK)

A Better Than Average Picture

THIS drama of business life and frenzied finance in Wall Street has a suspensive element that forces the spectator to pay strict attention to the continuity or he will become hopelessly confused. And this same suspense is maintained throughout and will baffle the majority of patrons until the climax.

A romantic angle is provided in what at first sight seems to be the eternal triangle, and true love runs quite roughly for a time amid the stocks and bonds environment. The business rivals and the lovers finally realize a prospective happy future.

The picture is well directed and the action is rapid. Florence Billings is capably supported by a well-balanced cast. The sets are very appropriate and the photography is up to standard. A better than average photoplay.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Wit Wins" is scheduled for a run at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

This is a Hallmark Picture produced by Burton King. Florence Billings is the star and both Hugh Thompson and Eugene Strong have leading roles. It is a six-reel production.

The story is described as a frenzied finance theme with most of the action in Wall Street. Even in this environment true love seems to flourish. And the romance unfolded shows that sentiment can take a strong hold upon hard-headed business men on occasions.

When the dominating financier takes the girl as his private secretary he secures not only an efficient girl, but a beautiful one. It is then that his son decides to take an interest in business. His father suspects that his son has suddenly become imbued with business affairs because of the striking young woman secretary he has engaged and tells him that if he intends to go into business he can do so, but he does not want him about the office.

The son is unsuccessful in many deals, and when some bonds are missing the guilty parties manage to successfully charge him with stealing them. In the meantime he had been visiting the charming young secretary of his father and often met his father's cashier coming out of her apartment.

He had become furiously jealous and the climax came when he discovered his sweetheart in the arms of the cashier. It is then he is accused of stealing the bonds that he begins to realize that his father's cashier and the pretty secretary are in a plot to ruin his father.

And right here is where the story becomes intensely interesting and the suspense is finally lifted. Of course the business rivals become staunch friends again as of yore. But the lovers have come over a rough road in their romance and a pleasant future is also assured for them.

The great suspensive element in this feature is what grips the spectator, according to all report.

PROGRAM READER

She told him that she loved him dearly, but when he discovered her in another man's arms in her own apartment he felt naturally that his father's charming secretary had been making a fool of him.

It was only a few days later that he was accused by his father's casbier of stealing some bonds.

Then he remembered that it was this same cashier that held his sweetheart in his arms.

It was a job and a plant directed against him at the hands of an unscrupulous woman and her pal. He bitterly resented their accusations and determined to prove that his pair were trying to ruin his father through casting a stigma upon him.

But it was a hard task to proceed against his girl. For in spite of all this he loved her to distraction.

In the final denouement of this romantic story laid amid the frenzied financial environments of Wall Street he realized that a pleasant future loomed up on the horizon for him.

Next week at this theatre this story is unfolded upon the screen. It is a Hallmark Picture directed by Burton King and starring Florence Billings.

Hugh Thompson and Eugene Strong have leading roles in the cast.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have booked this picture you should capitalize on the title, "Wit Wins." Display it everywhere and use the catch lines in connection. Describe it in your newspaper advertising as a romantic tale of Wall Street.

Florence Billings, Hugh Thompson and Eugene Strong each have a following, and the three names should always be prominently mentioned. Burton King as a director is also known to the majority.

Any local financial deal, especially anent public service corporations, that you can tie in with, seize the opportunity. Mention the local affair, which has undouhtedly received volumes of publicity, and mention that in "Wit Wins" many of the secret inside financial dealings of big corporate interests are bared to the public gaze.

CATCH LINES

Where frenzied finance gets a dent in its hard boiled shell.

Cupid's Darts clink against the metallic ring of the financiers.

It takes a charming woman to find the weak spots in the financial armor.

Where love storms the citadels of the mighty men of wealth and power.

Affluence surrenders to superior wits and all is well.

"TWIN PAWNS"

(PATHE)

This Will Be Generally Acceptable

HEAVILY dramatic, melodramatic and tragic in spots, portraying in one of the principal roles a villain absolutely without conscience plotting for wealth and power regardless of whom he may sacrifice.

It is a story of sadness with the inevitable happy future pictured at the finish, but as this is easily anticipated the suspense is nil. A well produced picture for this sort of story and handled by a capable and nicely balanced cast. Continuity is easy to follow and both photography and laboratory work are up to present day standards.

There are several thrills and much pathos with no comedy relief. The star shows ability in portraying the roles of twin sisters. A picture that will be generally quite acceptable.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, ordinary puller and quite pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing; Labor, big puller and very pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released September 28.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Twin Pawns," the Pathe picture starring Mae Murray, will come to the ——— theatre beginning ———. The photoplay is adapted from Wilkie Collins' famous novel, "The Woman in White," and it has been produced under the direction of Leonce Perret. The story is melodrama pure and simple and concerns twin sisters, Violet and Daisy White. They have been separated since childhood—in fact each is unaware of the existence of the other. Violet, the idol of her indulgent father, has everything her heart could wish, but Daisy, who has been raised by her mother, is poorly clad and underfed.

The fragile child of the slums is not aware that John Bent possesses certain papers which state her true relation to Harry White. By hiding from Daisy's father the truth of her existence, Bent is able to shift the twins to his own best advantage—they become mere pawns in other words. He hides Daisy away in a school and substitutes her for Violet, who is forced to marry him, when the former girl really dies. Violet, he disposes of, by having her declared insane and placed in an asylum. But her sweetheart, Bob Anderson, comes to the rescue and a happy ending follows.

"The Twin Pawns" is one of those stories which strikes out from the shoulder at the beginning of the first reel and holds the spectator in a tight embrace. Miss Murray differentiates the roles of the sisters with fine understanding and feeling and she is surrounded by a competent cast that includes such well known players as Warner Oland, J. W. Johnston, Henry G. Sell and others. The director has given the picture many beautiful settings besides bringing out the high lights of the story.

CATCH LINES

Do you like a good melodrama? Do you enjoy a story crammed with things that do not happen in your own life? If you do, come to the ——— theatre next ——— and see the beautiful Mae Murray in "The Twin Pawns." It is a rare treat.

A terrified shriek rang out—and her overhurdened heart stopped beating. This man had succeeded. But retribution came at last. How? You must see Mae Murray in "The Twin Pawns."

They were pawns—human pawns, these two sisters. Were they swept off the board in the game of life? See "The Twin Pawns" with beautiful Mae Murray as the star.

One girl was brought up in the lap of luxury—the other was a product of the slums. And an unkind Fate took charge of the girls and—see the intense melodrama adapted from Wilkie Collins' famous novel, "The Woman in White." It is "The Twin Pawns" and Mae Murray is the star.

She is the "maid of many moods," is Mae Murray. See her next ——— in "The Twin Pawns." It is a dramatic story of life, of two beautiful young girls who become pawns. In this human game of chess the pawns are revealed as queens.

Youth and love are strong forces. And they, in the end, proved the supremacy of virtue over evil. How it is worked out can only be seen at the ——— when Mae Murray appears in "The Twin Pawns.

PROGRAM READER

When you go to the ——— theatre next ——— you will see the "Maid of many moods," Mae Murray, portraying the dual role of twin sisters. You will see an adaptation of Wilkie Collins' famous novel, "The Woman in White," entitled "The Twin Pawns." It is a good old-fashioned melodrama and unfolds a rich number of scenes—scenes which are charged with pathos, humor, heart interest and romance. You will see a man's craving for wealth and power—a man's lust for greed that hesitates at nothing to accomplish his evil desires. You will see Mae Murray as twin sisters who are separated in their youth.

To give the plot in detail would be to remove much of the pleasure in seeing "The Twin Pawns" on the screen. Suffice to say that it is an excellent picture in every respect. The star is supported by a competent cast and the picture is produced under the direction of Leonce Perret, the man responsible for "The Thirteenth Chair." Remember the date, next ———. Be sure and see it.

SUGGESTIONS

There are four big exploitations angles to advertise this picture. First place must be given to Mae Murray, who is popularly called the "Maid of many moods." So feature her as such. Play her up big in stills and feature stories. She is remarkably beautiful and this fact should be impressed upon your audiences who are unacquainted with her. Mention that Warner Oland is associated with her. Bring out that the picture is taken from a world famous story—that it is adapted from Wilkie Collins' novel, "The Woman in White." Then mention the director and tell that he is responsible for that high-class picture, "The Thirteenth Chair."

Finally emphasize that the story is a redblooded melodrama hut which has a rich setting. Use circular letters stating that the beautiful Mae Murray will appear at the ——— next ——— in a fascinating story of triumphant virtue. You can distribute handhills or dodgers here with an appropriate catch line incorporated. Obtain all the advertising sheets from your nearest Pathe exchange and play them up. And use catch lines. We have written a number with that object in mind. Put plenty of punch in your copy. It is an exciting melodrama and calls for vigorous advertising.

Simplex

IGNITE A PIECE OF PAPER—

Lay it down before you, and watch it being quickly consumed by flame.—

It burns because there is sufficient oxygen surrounding it.

NOW IGNITE ANOTHER PIECE—

Press the burning portion between the thumb and forefinger. The fire is immediately snuffed out.—

This is due to the lack of oxygen between the tightly pressed finger and thumb.

IT IS THE OLD PRINCIPLE OF SNUFFING OUT THE CANDLE BY PLACING IT IN THE EMPTY BARREL.

The Simplex Film Trap is constructed with this same principle in mind—The film is threaded, the trigger is pulled, and all oxygen is expelled between the aperture surface and the tension shoes.

THAT'S WHY, IF USED AS CONSTRUCTED, NO FILM IGNITION CAN RESULT ON THE SIMPLEX ON ANY GREATER AREA THAN THE SIZE OF THE APERTURE OPENINGS.

This is only one of the many Simplex features that have made Simplex the choice of the industry.

"Hindsight" and "Foresight"

"It's not what you pay for a picture that counts, it's what the picture pays you."

More than a year ago we told that truth to you. Thousands of exhibitors believed the philosophy was sound.

Others disagreed—said they couldn't pay the prices asked for Paramount-Artcraft Pictures.

We knew the prices we asked were equitable prices for the exhibtor and we knew that the pictures—expensive pictures, worth every cent that was put into them—would make money and build business and prestige for exhibitors at the prices asked.

We knew that a consistent supply of fine pictures, nationally advertised, would bring prosperity to the theatres that showed them, and to the entire moving picture industry. Such pictures cost more money—for us, for the exhibitors, for the public.

We are willing to pay for finer pictures, so is the public and so are thousands of far-seeing exhibitors.

Exhibitors gifted with "hindsight" and "foresight" are booking Paramount-Artcraft Pictures, which cost more than other pictures.

"Hindsight" tells them that the exhibitors who have been paying higher prices for Paramount-Artcraft Pictures are much more successful than those who buy cheap pictures.

"Foresight" tells them that the Paramount-Artcraft exhibitor is entering an era of prosperity even greater than that of a year ago. Paramount-Artcraft Pictures are sound investments, proved. They pay you.

THE BANDBOX

Picturized from the famous novel by

Louis Joseph Vance

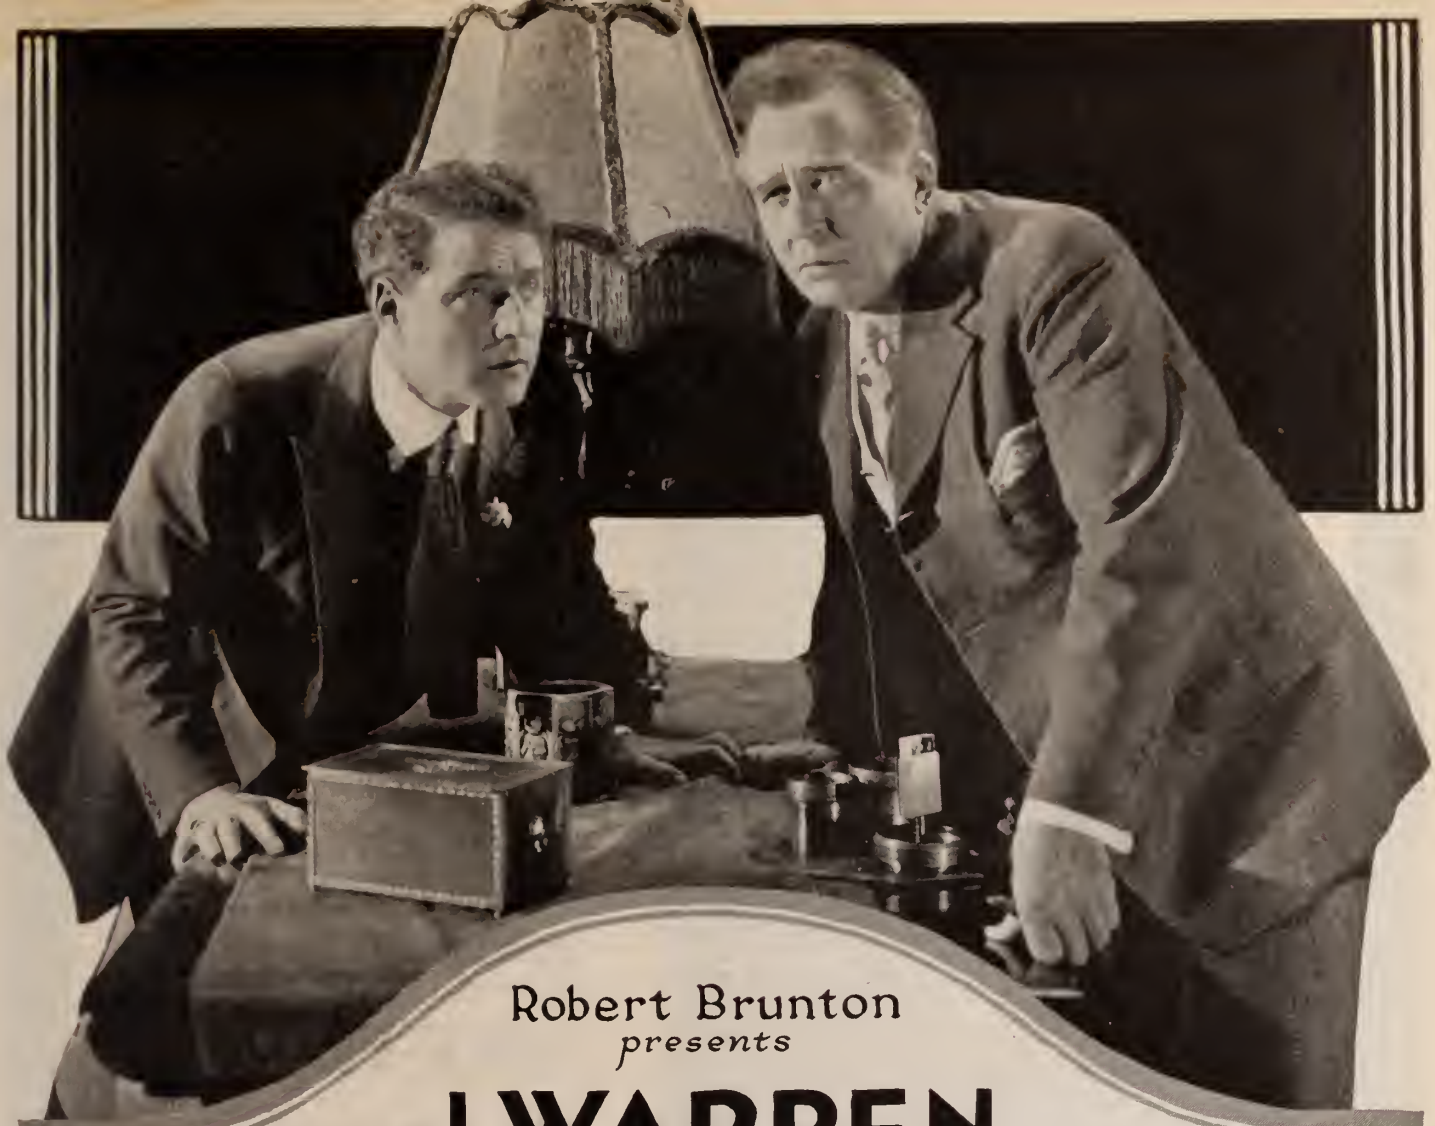
Directed by R. WILLIAM NEILL

Action — as swift and and vivid as flashes of lightning in a hard storm. That causes the same surprising emotions as lightning flashes.

Suspense — as tense as your feeling when you watch a tight-rope walker seventy-five feet in mid-air under a swaying canvas circus tent-top.

Surprise — and the interest that any normal man or woman will have in seeing an entrancingly beautiful girl escaping from tight corners.

Drama — that grips like those thrilling old melodramas with the heroine bound to rails before an oncoming train; or a hero bound to the log moving into the teeth of the saw.



All of this, Good Exhibitors and Good People, is in our newest Deitrich-Beck winter special "The Bandbox," now ready for release.

It Is By Far the Best

It is worthy of Hayakawa—and by far the best thing he has done since his well remembered performance in "The Cheat." In fact it is the opinion of the present writer that his work in this latest picture surpasses anything he has ever done, and we will go further and say the screen has given us nothing we like more.

It is a true work of art, a picture that will elevate picturedom in the eyes of the "show me" people who refuse to believe that a motion picture can be possessed of a soul.

HELEN ROCKWELL in the Exhibitor's Trade Review

It Surpasses the Majority

The quality of the story and the acting in "The Dragon Painter" lifts it quite out of the class of the ordinary routine picture . . . . It surpasses in artistry the majority of productions now on the market. In its story and the telling of it it has both poetry and imagination. There are no "East and West" complications. Instead it is a thoroughly Japanese story with immense charm and beauty.

Mr. Hayakawa's acting is some of the finest he has ever done. It is an imaginative performance with some inspired moments. Those who are used to seeing him in suave and subtle characterizations will be surprised at the force and power of his picture of the untamed genius.

AGNES SMITH in the N. Y. Morning Telegraph

A Gem of Its Kind

The story itself is suggestive of an old legend of the land of its locale, Japan. That a film so realistic of the Orient can be produced in California is almost beyond belief, but here it is, a gem of its kind. . . . We can only give the production the highest praise.

J. S. DICKERSON in the Motion Picture News

High-Class, Clean, Moral

One of the most attractive of the Haworth productions released by Robertson-Cole. . . . The role of Tatsu, the mad artist, affords the star a totally different type of character to portray than any he has attempted. His conception of the part is intensely artistic. . . . The story is original in character supplying a wealth of romanticism. The production is high class, clean of moral, and beautiful of conception.

MARGARET McDONALD in the Moving Picture World

Unequalled in Beauty

It is doubtful if a picture has ever been produced to equal "The Dragon Painter" in artistic beauty. It is bewilderingly enchanting. The average artistic picture is dry, but this one is an exception. Besides holding the attention, it influences the deep emotions—those of tender pathos. It is really the first time that natural beauty and story have been harmoniously blended in a picture. Pictures of this character elevate the art of motion pictures, adding class and distinction to the theatres that run them.

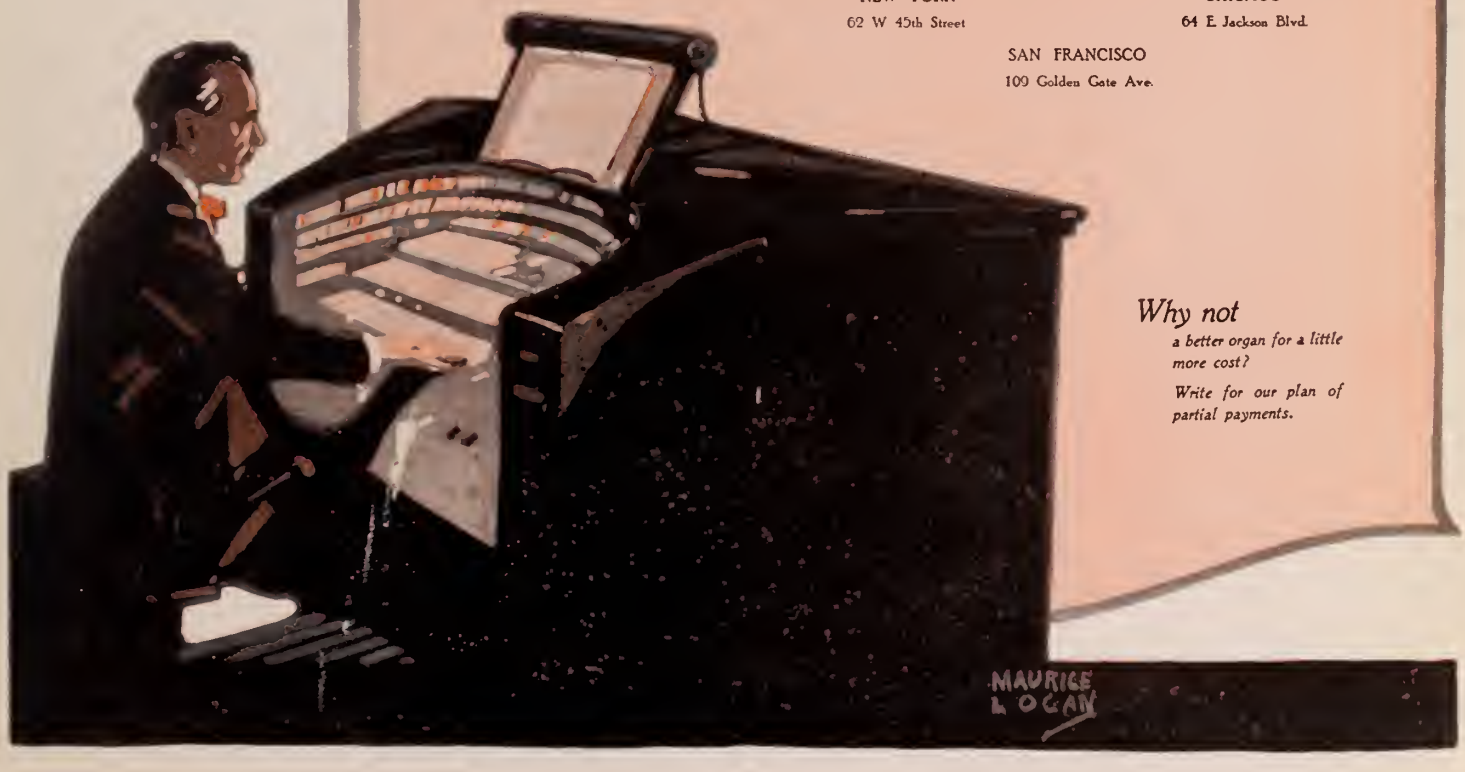
The ROBERT-MORTON
a reproduction of the Symphony Orchestra

More Vividly Interprets The Real Action of the Screen Story

Upon the foundation of the full natural organ tones—the Robert-Morton is elaborated with brilliant string and reed effects producing an instrument of the wonderful variety and power of a symphony orchestra. Organists appreciate the ingenious system of double touch—the remarkable quick and silent shutter action and the arrangement of musical effects—original features of this wonderful orchestral organ.



The keen theatre man who realizes that he must deal in known values—who can not afford to speculate with his musical feature has determined upon the Robert-Morton—both for its solo possibilities and economy in augmenting his orchestra. The enthusiasm of those who own or play the Robert-Morton is an endorsement of its superior tonal and mechanical quality.

The American Photo Player Company,

San Francisco, Calif.

Gentlemen:

In answer to your request, relative to our organ, beg to advise that the Robert-Morton Organ installed in our California Theatre has met in every way with our utmost expectations.

We are absolutely satisfied with this instrument, and the public seem to be of the same opinion.

The only adverse criticism we have ever heard is due to the installation. Our theatre is so constructed that it is necessary to have heavy draperies hanging in a circular form in front of the instrument which is more or less of an obstacle in bringing forth the fineness of the organ.

However we can say nothing else, than that should we be in the market for another organ, we would be pleased to place an order for the duplicate of the one we are now using.

With best wishes, we remain

Yours very truly,

MILLER AMUSEMENT COMPANY

By Fred A. Miller
President.

California's Great Organist:

I am taking advantage of this opportunity to compliment you on the tremendous improvement you have accomplished in organ building. Your specification which combines a Cathedral Organ and a Unit Orchestra in one instrument is a great step forward, as it enables one to get effects not possible in an instrument built solely on either of those two very different plans of construction.

There are many other commendable features in the Robert-Morton, and wishing you continued and even greater success, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

Jesse J. Crawford

Excellent Comedy Business in Circus Atmosphere Sure-Fire Laughing Success

Mabel Normand in

"JINX"

DIRECTOR .....Victor Schertzinger

AUTHOR .....Shannon Fife

SCENARIO BY .....Gerald C. Duffy

CAMERAMAN .....George Webber

AS A WHOLE.....Exceptionally human and smooth running comedy that hits on high and registers laughs with very pleasing regularity.

STORY.....Just enough to nicely tie together funny bits of business.

DIRECTION.....Gave great circus atmosphere with ideal conditions for star to register in, and kept comedy tempo just right to keep it from lagging at any time.

PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally excellent; many splendid close-ups of star.

LIGHTINGS.....Some beautiful exterior shots, with lighting on star excellent.

CAMERA WORK.....Very good throughout.

STAR.....Registered one of the greatest characterizations of her career.

SUPPORT.....Good types, with kids and animals fitting in naturally and registering much good comedy.

EXTERIORS.....Very good.

INTERIORS.....Quite satisfactory.

DETAIL.....Very good.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Wholesome and happy; will delight kids and grown-ups.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,069 feet.

They certainly have rung the bell with this latest Mabel Normand offering. The laughs come with a regularity that keeps you happy, and all of the comedy business blends naturally into the story, which provides just enough action to tie the incidents together and keep it running smoothly.

Can you imagine opening up on Mabel in a funny roustabout's costume, seated nonchalantly under a big elephant manicuring his nails? That first introduction is going to get them, and from that time on they will all be with Mabel, because the comedy continues fast and furious without ever running too far afield to register effectively.

Mabel is the Jonah of the circus, and when the star dancer quits Mabel undertakes to do the famous "Rainbow" dance in which she tries to manipulate yards upon yards of gauze at the end of two long sticks—you remember, the old serpentine dance stuff.

The fun they get out of Mabel's efforts with this dance, which precipitates a fight between the "wild" man, who is Mabel's friend, and the manager, with the panic of the crowd when the "wild" man escapes, is about as sure-fire as anything ever screened.

Mabel, after her escape from the circus, lands at a farm house where a kindly old lady is caring for seven orphans of various ages, and after her human introduction (the kids thinking first she is a fairy) we find her staging a home circus for the youngsters. This provides many more laughs. Then we have a touch of melodrama when the drunken manager tries to get even with Mabel and almost wrecks the house, with the "wild" man again whipping him in a corking good fight, which melodrama is carried just far enough to not allow it to offset the comedy spirit which pervades the entire film.

Of course, we finish with the "wild" man, who was also the ticket seller of the circus, and Mabel happy on the farm.

The first reel gets away to a wonderful start, not only because of the excellent handling of the action but because of some very fine titles. There are many other good titles running through the film, some of them being classics.

I believe this is one of the most effective things Miss Normand has ever done, because she gets a chance to put over human little bits of business that will register with anyone, and she swings from the uproarious comedy to the human little character touch so naturally that we don't have any offensively false notes in the entire offering.

If your crowd don't get a good time out of the circus stuff in this, and the fun Miss Normand has with her first meal and the home circus on the farm, then there is something wrong with your gang, because this production should surely register as a real comedy in any community, and I don't have to tell you how few real comedies are made.

The general photographic value was excellent, and I want to particularly commend the handling of Miss Normand's close-ups, because those big beautiful eyes will certainly win anyone as photographed in this.

Once or twice they were dangerously near letting the melodrama, needed to tie the story together, take up too much footage, but it was shut off just in time, and it provides the necessary contrast and action thrill to round the subject out very satisfactorily.

The very pleasing cast included: Cullen Landis, Frances Carpenter, Ogden Crane, Gertrude Claire and Clarence Arper.

Real Comedies Are Few and I Think This Is a Sure One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It seems to me that here is a sure-fire comedy that you can afford to step out on and be sure that all your regular cash customers are going to have a look at it. The title is a very catchy one, and I would start a teaser campaign well in advance of your theatre announcement, advising your folks that the "Jinx" is coming. After centering some little attention on the "Jinx" you might switch it to "Why do they call Mabel Normand the 'Jinx'?" holding that long enough to tie the star's name to the title and then come out with an announcement promising one of the best comedies this popular little star has ever turned out.

The circus atmosphere provided a fine background for the comedy, and you might use in your advertising such lines as "Can you imagine Mabel Normand manicuring an elephant's toes? Can you imagine Mabel running down the top of a circus tent dragging yards upon yards of gauze she had tried to use in a serpentine dance? Can you imagine Mabel showing the kids in an orphanage how the circus she has just run away from should be put on in their own back yard? You will be tickled through and through when you see Miss Normand in the 'Jinx'."

So many films have been offered as comedies, with press agents running wild with careless adjectives, that it seems to me to be quite advisable these days, when you know you have a real comedy, to make that fact clear to your fans by some personal statement, and I surely think you are more than safe in promising that they are going to get a full portion of laughs when they see Mabel Normand in this latest release.

The circus element of the story offers a lot of very good advertising angles, such as this thought: "The crowd couldn't know that the man who sold them tickets also worked as the wild man, so you can't blame them if they create a panic when he escapes from his cage to defend Mabel Normand in the big circus scene of the 'Jinx.' Come and forget your troubles, because if this does not cure you there is no hope."

The typical American boy in a story taken from the childhood of everyone

"In Wrong"

Written and directed by James Kirkwood
Presented by the Jack Pickford Film Co.

THIS is a picture that will take your patrons straight back to the days of the old swimmin' hole and the rag doll. It is full of fun and pathos. It will keep them laughing, and bring the tears to their eyes when they recall their own childhood sorrows that seemed such tragedies at the time. Poor Jack is in wrong most of the time. Do you think he can make good? Well, the picture will.

A BORN coquette, she flutters about the flame of love, laughing when others are burned. Men are at her feet; wives and sweethearts are aching with jealousy. Then, suddenly, her own beautiful wings are singed, and she realizes the anguish of unrequited love. You can realize how your patrons will stir with wonder as to how this game of hearts will end

IMAGINE the tense situation of a young and beautiful girl, anticipating love and happiness in marriage, suddenly startled by the fact that she has been wedded for revenge. Told by her husband on her wedding night that her race will die with her, this disillusioned bride resorted to the strongest plan to preserve her sacred right to motherhood, her love for children. A picture so unusual, so fascinating in its dramatic intensity it will keep your patrons puzzling for weeks as to WHAT THEY WOULD DO!

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 20, No. 17 October 18, 1919

"Slow Down—For Curve"

THERE'S a very large sermon in a small text recently sent us by an exhibitor. He's a small-town exhibitor.

He says: "So-and-so called on me this week. They wanted me to pay $150 for their latest release. Said I could make money if I advertised it properly. Yes, so I could. But in that event I wouldn't make any more money for at least two weeks. In other words I'd simply make my three weeks profit in one week. I've tried it before."

Here's an exhibitor with a set clientele — and a small one. Will some one explain to us — and to him — wherein he is wrong in his statement above?

WE BELIEVE HEARTILY in exhibitor advertising and its possibilities. It seems unnecessary to state that.

We believe in fewer and better pictures.

We believe that the producer of better pictures should be rewarded with higher rental prices; and generally we believe that where the exhibitor increases greatly his box-office receipts because the producer gives him better goods and full advertising cooperation, the producer should have his just share of these greater earnings.

We realize that not only better pictures but higher production costs demand higher rentals.

We also believe in higher admission prices — where only courage and advertising ability are needed to get the public to pay more, and where a special picture deserves a special price.

BUT WE'D LIKE to point out two very large and salient facts, both of which may have been forgotten in this rattling end of prosperity now with us.

Fact number one is nothing more or less than the reason for the industry's prosperity.

We are all aware that the picture business is one of the wonders of the modern commercial world — that other business men, even big business men, look upon its huge and swift development as something so mysterious as almost to be uncanny.

And, occasionally, perhaps, we stop long enough and think hard enough to realize the basic reason for it all.

The reason is: That the picture offers, to the world's millions, the best entertainment at the lowest price.

And the moral is: That while we are centering ourselves upon "the best entertainment" we'll make a wild plunge off the main-line tracks if we forget all about the other and related factor "lowest price."

"The best entertainment at the lowest price!"

IF WE FAIL to maintain this lowest price, if we get it so near other entertainment that the public mind wavers, if we advance it so far that we interest the world's classes but not the world's masses — then the mysterious power of the picture may become all too evident by vanishing overnight.

We are told that rental prices have advanced — this fall — 400 per cent over last year.

That's a good deal.

We are not questioning a single rental price. We don't know overselves, and we've never encountered anyone who does know, just what is a fair rental price; and we don't believe it ever will be generally determined except upon a percentage basis.

But we do advise caution. And we do believe that the present period of prosperity has brought with it a good deal of cockiness, money-madness, and hectic ambition.

THE SALES MANAGER today who's got his hand only on the high rental lever and his eye only on the rental gauge isn't seeing much else.

He isn't seeing, perhaps, that full advertising cooperation goes with a full rental price; that it's dangerous, let alone unfair, to ask one without giving the other.

He's apt not to see the exhibitor is his customer, his, to be fostered and protected, his blood relative in business, his business partner.

He's apt, in fact, to miss seeing all danger signals ahead.

FACT NUMBER TWO is this: The small-town exhibitor must not be overlooked, else you take away another underpinning of the picture industry, namely, its general circulation, not only in the entertainment palaces of the big cities but also in the community centers of the towns and hamlets of this broad country.

The constant danger in this business is that we look at it through theatrical eyes — I mean, we measure it by the business precepts and traditions of the show business which preceded it.

This is the business of the film. It has its own commercial foot-rule. It has its own field. It will develop only along its own lines. Let's keep it there, where it belongs, where it's own magic momentum is, namely, as "the best entertainment at the lowest price."

HIGHER ADMISSIONS

Price Increase Policy Not Affecting Business

THE raise in admission prices continues to feature reports received from many sections of the country. Higher film rentals and increased overhead in general is given as the cause, yet withal, it appears the public is meeting the increases when they go hand in hand with better shows.

All of Detroit's leading photoplay theatres, with one exception, now charge 50 cents for the best seats at night. The entire lower floor of the Adams, Broadway Strand and Madison have been set at the new figure. So far as can be observed the increase of 10 cents in price has made no difference in the number of persons attending and the receipts have been much greater.

The leading downtown motion picture theatres of Cincinnati raised their admission prices commencing Sunday, Oct. 5. The Walnut theatre went from 15 and 25 cents to 18 and 27 cents, plus war tax. The family theatre raised from 15 cents to 18 cents, plus war tax. The Strand theatre, while changing its prices also changed its policy. The price was 15 cents for all seats; now Manager I. Libson charges 18 and 27 cents for lower and upper floor seats, plus war tax.

Board of Directors of the National Association Meet

The quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held yesterday at the headquarters in the Times Building.

Walter W. Irwin, Chairman of the Executive Committee, presided in the absence of President William A. Brady.

Various routine matters were considered, and the Committee reports which were submitted for approval indicated that good progress was being made by the national standing committees, including Censorship, Sunday Opening, Transportation, Fire Prevention Regulations, Film Theft, Taxation, Film Exchange Buildings, etc.

Chairman Gabriel L. Hess of the Censorship Committee reported that the bills which had been introduced in the legislatures of Georgia and Alabama had never been reported out of committee.

President Brady filed his nominations of the members of the Executive Committee for the ensuing year as follows: Walter W. Irwin, Chairman; William A. Brady, ex-officio; Arthur S. Friend, Lewis Innerarity, W. E. Atkinson, John C. Flinn, Lewis J. Selznick, Gabriel L. Hess, J. E. Brulatour, John M. Quinn, Paul H. Cromelin, Jack G. Leo.

R-C Establishes Own Exchanges

Breaks Away From Exhibitors Mutual, Says Announcement; Later may be Taken Over by Frank Hall

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Robertson-Cole Company that beginning this week all of their pictures will be released through Robertson-Cole exchanges located in twenty-six (26) of the principal cities throughout the country. Not only will the current and the coming releases be marketed through Robertson-Cole's own organization but all pictures that have heretofore been issued by the Robertson-Cole Division of Films.

Coincident with the announcement of the establishment of the Robertson-Cole exchanges it is intimated that a big expansion in the number of productions and stars under the standard of the company is to be expected shortly. In the meantime every effort is being devoted to the perfection of the system of selling and exploitation of pictures and Robertson-Cole Exchange service will be of the same high standard as that set for their pictures.

Among the pictures that will be available for release at all of the Robertson-Cole Exchanges are the star series of Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, H. B. Warner, William Desmond, Billie Rhodes, Henry B. Walthall, Alma Rubens, Beatriz Michelena, the Brentwood productions and other specials, as well as the new Superior Picture series of Hayakawa, Barriscale, Warner and of Edith Storey. The Martin Johnson pictures and the new Adventure Scenics will also be marketed through Robertson-Cole's own distributing unit.

"It will be the policy of Robertson-Cole to give to the exhibitor service of the same high standard as our pictures," stated an official of the organization. "We have maintained from the beginning the highest standard of excellence in production and nothing that did not come up to that standard was allowed to go out under the Robertson-Cole brand. Now we intend to create that standard in marketing our own pictures and the exhibitor may rest assured it will be achieved.

"We are proud of the Robertson-Cole record of the past year, proud of the work of the producing units in the way they have measured up to the demands we have made upon them and proud of the co-operation and cordial relations we have had with the exhibitors of the country. We have steadily tried to keep in close communion with exhibitors to learn their needs and supply them and in doing this become convinced that releasing direct to them was one of the essentials for their success and ours.

"The number of Robertson-Cole first run houses is increasing with each release. With the new schedule embracing all Superior Pictures an even greater percentage of increase is expected from week to week. We are preparing to cope with this enormous expansion as it develops in the course of the next six months."

The rise of Robertson-Cole in both the foreign and domestic fields has been steady. Starting in December with the Cannibal Pictures of Martin Johnson the company has since released a feature picture every week and from time to time put out big specials. A one reel Comedy has also been released at the rate of one a week and the latest announcement is that of the Adventure Scenics, a series of thirty-one reel pictures with a distinctly novel turn to them because of the introduction of a light dramatic theme in each picture. H. H. Brownell, and Jesse G. Sill are the creators of these scenics.

In connection with the announcement of Robertson-Cole's plans for their own exchanges it was rumored that Frank Hall had completed a deal taking over the Exhibitor Mutual Exchanges.

First Director's Meeting of United Artists

The first annual stockholders and directors' meeting of the United Artists' Corporation, made up of Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, has just come to a close in Los Angeles and W. G. McAdoo, general counsel for the new organization; Oscar A. Price, president; Hiram Abrams, general manager, and the personal attorneys of the various stars are not treking Eastward again after having sat in at the big cinema pow-wow.

If the film world was anticipating big announcements following this meeting, then the film world is doomed to disappointment, for the matters discussed were for the most part details of organization, despite rumors to the contrary.

Among the things established at the conferences were release dates of forthcoming productions of the various stars. It was announced, following the final meeting, that Broken Blossoms, Griffith's most recent screen triumph, is to be released October 20; Fairbank's latest production, as yet not named, will appear upon the screens on December 15, and Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna" will be shown by exhibitors on December 28, and will run through the Holiday season.

DuPont's Deny Intention to Enter Industry

E. I. duPont de Nemours & Company wishes to deny the reports that have been printed recently to the effect that it either has in contemplation, or is engaged in, a plan to control motion picture exhibiting in the United States. This company has made no attempt to purchase any motion picture house nor has it taken up the matter of controlling pictures with any exhibitors' organization. Rumors of such purchase, or the purchase of interest in or control of motion picture exhibiting, are false.

Goldwyn to Produce in London

Plans Well Under Way He Announces and Five Directors Will Work There; Eastern Activity to be Larger

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, President of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, on his return from the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, California, announced that his Company has plans now well under way for the establishment of a Goldwyn producing center in London. Five directors have already been selected and the producing organization for the English field is almost completed.

With this announcement, Mr. Goldwyn also stated that plans for the Eastern studio are such as to make the Goldwyn studio, which will be situated near New York, as large as and as complete as the studio at Culver City. The Coast producing center is now the largest in the world. Plans for producing in the East and in London will in no way curtail the output or interfere with the present comprehensive scheme of production at the Pacific Coast studios.

Ten companies are now at work at Culver City and Mr. Goldwyn stated that a new system had been perfected whereby each company is in itself a complete unit with every facility of its own essential to artistic pictures. "The danger in quantity production," said Mr. Goldwyn, "is in turning out a machine-like product. To overcome that we are putting each producing company on its own feet so that the directors and the actors will have to consider nothing but the artistic perfection of their own work"

Mr. Goldwyn said that the next year would see astonishing changes in the whole structure of the motion picture organizations both in production and distribution. "At the present time," he said, "the situation in distribution is such that in some places exhibitors are paying more than they ought to and in other places, the exhibitor so controls the situation that he does not pay what the picture is worth. This is an unhealthy condition in any industry. I want to say that we are in the producing business first. We are out to build good pictures, but any time that we find that a corner in theatres prevents the proper showing of our product, we will be forced to erect our own theatres and will be in a position to do so in order that the public may be sure of seeing the picture that we make under the best possible auspices.

"On my return East, I stopped at San Francisco, Dallas and many other cities and everywhere heard only the best reports on Goldwyn Pictures as they are being made at the present time. Exhibitors tell me that our stars are popular and that our productions are in every way coming up to the highest standard in photoplays

Newspaper Man Enters the Ranks of Publicists

The publicity department of Realart Pictures Corporation this week welcomed Frank Ross, a newspaper and publicity man, to its ranks.

Mr. Ross had previous connection with motion picture exploitation as he handled the publicity for several conventions of the Kansas branch of the League of Motion Picture Exhibitors.

Utah Exhibitors Get New Rules of Health Board

The Utah state board of health has issued a set of regulations for the ventilation of theatres, picture show houses and public houses of amusement. These regulations were submitted to the managers of several picture houses in Utah and met with approval before they were announced.

The new regulations require that in both new theatres and in theatres already existing, enclosures for booths for the motion picture machines shall be provided with an exhaust ventilation having sufficient capacity to remove at all times not less than 160 cubic feet of air per minute per machine through a two-machine booth, and not less than 120 cubic feet of air per minute per machine through a three-machine booth.

Where pictures, films and their equipment are passed on as fireproof by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, the department of health may, in its discretion, modify the booth requirements.

Owners of buildings at present without proper ventilation will be given from three to six months to remodel and provide ventilation in accordance with the new rules.

Minnesota Considers Film Controlling Measures

Two measures have been introduced into the special session of the Minnesota State legislature now in being which are of interest to the trade by reason of the lengths to which legislators of a certain type are prepared to go in endeavoring to obtain control of the motion picture business.

The first bill, a copy of which has been received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, would place motion picture theatres throughout the state under the supervision of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, would give that body power to decide what prices should be charged for admission, and would provide for a system of costly licenses.

The second bill would prohibit the scale of tickets in excess of the seating capacity of any motion picture house.

Neither bill is expected to survive.

Change from Vaudeville to Pictures Popular

Over 100 telegrams of congratulations to the management of the Strand Theatre, Portland, and more than 25 appreciative wires to S. Morton, Cohn, the owner were received on Saturday, September 20 when that theater formally opened to the public as a cinema house, proper. For years the Strand has been conducted as combination vaudeville and motion picture theatre.

Another Addition to the Allen Theatre Chain

Jule and J. J. Allen of Toronto have added to their list of moving picture theatres in the Canadian West by the acquisition of the Orpheum Theatre at Edmonton, Alberta, which was formerly operated as the Bijon.

Immediate Removal of Taxes Doubtful

Emissary of New York Exhibitors Finds Little Hope of Alleviation in near future after Talk with Influential men; "What will replace the revenue" is the question

BUT little hope for the immediate removal of all taxes on films and admissions could be visioned by the exhibitors who on October 7, through the instrumentality of the M. P. E. L. A. presented their arguments before the Ways and Means Committee of Congress.

This, according to a report made by the M. P. E. L. of New York, could but be expected as emissaries sent to Washington by direction of the Executive Committee of that body returned with no hopes of early rectification of the exhibitors' burden.

S. I. Berman, Executive Secretary of the New York organization obtained this unfavorable opinion after a conference with Congressman Kahn, who introduced the tax removal bill, and with Chairman Fordney of the House Committee on Ways and Means to which the bill was referred.

Hope for Eventual Removal

Mr. Berman had gone to Washington not only on behalf of the New York State organization, but also in response to many requests received from exhibitors' organizations and individual exhibitors from every part of the country.

On his return from Washington Mr. Berman said:

"The exhibitors of the country should be made to realize that there is no chance whatever of obtaining any immediate relief from the taxation which oppresses them and their patrons. It is always better to face an unpleasant fact than to hug pleasant illusions. I believe the time will come when we will get the relief we are seeking for ourselves and the motion picture loving public. There is no one even in the best informed circles who can say how soon the relief may be looked for; it is considered most improbable that it will come in the next few months.

"This attitude on the part of members of the House is not due to any indifference to the present sad plight of the exhibitor. On the contrary, members of the House were advised that the film rental tax is a particularly oppressive hardship on the exhibitor. We told them that the film rental tax is taking more money from the exhibitors than was originally intended, and they also realize that the small exhibitor has lost business through the tax on admissions. Their position is best illustrated by what one of the big men in the House said: 'You motion picture men will be considered when the proper moment comes. In the meantime get busy to make out the best possible case for yourselves.' I am very happy to say that in following the advice of this congressman we have interested the United States Commissioner of Education, Dr. Claxton, in a campaign to abolish all taxes on films and admissions because the motion picture as an aid to adult education is entitled to this exemption. Dr Claxton besides being at the head of the United States Bureau of Education is recognized as one of the most distinguished educators of the country and is an expert on adult education. He assured the representatives of the New York State organization of his firm belief that the motion picture is a great aid to adult education and that in his opinion it is entitled to such protection as is given to other educational agencies.

"Dr. Claxton was greatly interested in the brief on the 'value of the motion picture as an aid to adult education,' and seemed to be impressed by the fact that the legislature of New York and Connecticut had given the right of Sunday opening to the motion picture theatres. He said in substance: 'While as an officer of the administration for whose action the Secretary of the Interior is responsible, I am not in a position to volunteer any views or opinions to the Congress unless officially requested to do so. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe the motion picture screen is an aid in adult education and entitled to the same protection which is enjoyed by other means or agencies of education. If I am requested by any member of the Congress who is interested in the subject to submit my opinions, I will submit them in the sense indicated.'

"With this encouraging information we called on Congressman Kahn, the sponsor of the bill for the removal of all taxes on films and admissions. Optimist though he is, Mr. Kahn held out no hopes for speedy relief. He is a great friend of the screen. Though as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs he is practically handling three-fourths of the present legislation pending in the House, and though the demand on his time much exceeds the supply I am sure he is doing his utmost to help us.

"Chairman Fordney of the House Committee on Ways and Means before which the Kahn bill is now pending received the representatives of the New York organization most hospitably.

Shifts Among World's Directors

President Gradwell Resigns his Position; Milton Work Succeeding; B. N. Busch is General Manager

THE Board of Directors of the World Film Corporation has confirmed the rumor that has been current for some weeks that President Ricord Gradwell had tendered his resignation some time since. It became effective September 30.

No announcement as to Mr. Gradwell's future activities is made except that he remains a member of the Board of Directors of the World Film Corporation.

Mr. Milton C. Work was elected President succeeding Mr. Gradwell. Mr. Work has, ever since the inauguration of the company, been a member of the Finance Committee and as such is thoroughly familiar with the affairs of the organization.

Mr. Briton N. Busch, in addition to his duties as Treasurer of the Corporation, a position that he has held for a number of years, will become General Manager.

Mr. George Mecker remains as General Sales Manager; Mr. Lee Kugel in charge of publicity and Mr. S. D. Van Horn of advertising.

Clark-Cornelius to Distribute on a Large Scale

COINCIDENT with the announcement of the sales of the twenty-six exchanges of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation to Hallmark Pictures Corporation, it is announced that the Clark-Cornelius Corporation will enter the field of motion picture distribution on an extensive scale. Its sales organization has already been formed.

In the same transaction by which the Exhibitors Mutual sold its exchanges to the Hall Corporation, Exhibitors Mutual cancelled its distribution contract with the Robertson-Cole Company.

The Hallmark Corporation will handle physical distribution of the productions of Clark-Cornelius Corporation as well as the future releases of Exhibitors Mutual.

Clark-Cornelius Corporation now owns the negative rights to the twelve Chaplin Classics, the first of which, "The Floorwalker" was released on October 5.

Clark-Cornelius Corporation, it is announced, will handle, in addition to the Chaplins a series of special productions of big magnitude. Its present plans are to distribute twelve specials a year.

The negotiations for the sale of exchanges were handled for Exhibitors Mutual by H. C. Cornelius, vice president of Exhibitors Mutual. He was represented by the legal firm of Wing & Russell.

Educational to Enlarge Program

Special Branch in Short Subject Field is Planned — Announces That Other Improvements are Contemplated

THE increase in the activities of the Educational Films Corporation of America will lead to the addition of a number of established single-reel attractions, according to an announcement by Vice-President E. W. Hammons this week. He states that several well known short subject features are contemplated as likely material for the Educational exchanges, and that others are in prospect that will give to the enlarged organization a much wider variety of subjects than formerly for international distribution.

Mr. Hammons says that it is his purpose to have each separate branch of the short-subject field represented in the new Educational plan. Those subjects which are not to be produced entirely within the limits of the recent incorporation are to be secured on the open market, and the new possibilities will open the way to make attractive arrangements for the distribution of certain independent short-subject productions that are now being released, and which the new producing organization would rather not duplicate. There are to be several new releases, to be produced by Educational, but the aim is toward a complete short subject program, and this policy will permit affiliations with existing releases.

Since the inception of Educational five years ago it has been the practice of free-lance and independent producers of short subject material to first submit their products to "short subject headquarters." Therefore the Educational executives have had an unusual opportunity to study the short subject market, and to watch the ultimate success or failure of propositions that were accepted or passed by. This experience has been invaluable, and Mr. Hammons emphasizes the fact that Educational's specialization is equally valuable to those who submit new material for production or distribution.

At the present time, several members of the Educational staff devote a large part of their time to the inspection of film that is submitted for possible sale or release. An effort is made to improve the quality of the free-lance material that is inspected, and this effort, combined with the work that is being done in the training and instruction of cameramen, will mean a great deal accomplished toward the improvement of free-lance offerings.

In a discussion of the short-subject market for this fall and winter, Mr. Hammons said, "The new Educational organization is in the market for single-reel material, and we invite negotiations with producers who would be interested in increased production on a world-wide basis. In a number of instances the advantages of the new Educational plan have been outlined in a personal interview, and several interesting announcements to the trade may be expected in the near future."

Frohman Corp. to Produce Serial

Guy McConnell Will Essay the Writing of a New Story — Title Will be "The Invisible Ray"

GUY McCONNELL, who became well known as the writer of "Pearl Of The Army," will essay a new production for the Frohman Amusement Corporation. His new work will be, like his first, a fact-story serial. This time, however, Mr. McConnell has invaded scientific fields for his subject and has procured one which is said to give ample opportunity for novel and dramatic action. The title of the new serial is "The Invisible Ray." Its producer is The Frohman Amusement Corporation, of which Mr. William L. Sherrill is President.

Guy McConnell has had the audacity to take the very biggest and most imaginative theme of the day and try to reduce it to dramatic photography in story form, continued story form. It is a theme that has to do with the planet forces.

Around this theme, mysterious in itself, is woven a human story, a mystery story too, the exploitation of one dependent upon the unravelling of the other. Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherrill, with an all-star cast of assistants, will attempt the unraveling, playing the parts of "Mystery" the heroine and Jack Stone, the hero.

Jesse J. Goldberg, Frohman's General Manager, said: "The cast has been the most carefully chosen aggregation of men and women that I have ever experienced during my connection with motion picture productions. Miss Ruth Clifford, Jack Sherrill, Edwards Davis, Sidney Bracey, are names that of themselves should certify to the merit of those who will interpret the various parts."

Ontario Also Fighting Amusement Tax

The organized exhibitors of Ontario have undertaken to secure the repeal of the amusement tax act of the Ontario Government on the ground that the conditions which led to the decision to impose a tax on theatre tickets do not now exist. The Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario enjoys the support of the projection machine operators and also of the Great War Veterans' Association, it is announced. The views of the exhibitors are being presented to Hon. T. W. McGarry, the Ontario Provincial Treasurer.

The exhibitors' association is also seeking the establishment of a new examining board for projection machine operators. The suggestion is made that this board consist of representatives of the theatres, operators' unions and exchanges and the privilege of issuing license cards to operators is wanted for this board.

Meet to Discuss Banding with N. A. M. P. I.

Lewis Innerarity, Chairman of the Committee on Organization of F. I. L. M. Clubs and Exchange Managers' Associations for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has issued a call for a meeting to be held on Wednesday, October 29, at 2.30 P. M., at the National Association offices in the Times Building, New York, when definite plans will be formulated by the delegates for the organization of an association to be affiliated with the National Association.

Notice has been sent to all F. I. L. M. Clubs, Exchange Managers' Associations and Film Boards of Trade suggesting that they should send as delegates to the convention their President or Secretary or both, so that in perfecting the plans for the new body their experience and familiarity with local conditions may be available.

The idea of the contemplated organization was presented by Mr. Innerarity in his report read at the Third Annual Meeting of the Association at Rochester last August and was approved in its entirety by the Association.

Hahn, Rothacker's Aide is Back from Army

J. G. Hahn, assistant secretary of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company and Mr. Rothacker's principal assistant in charge of the factory and production work at the busy Chicago plant, is now back in harness again after a year in the army.

Mr. Hahn first became associated with Mr. Rothacker at the Chicago office of the Billboard, several years ago. Later on Mr. Hahn went to the Pacific coast and established the San Francisco office of The Billboard where he gained valuable experience in connection with the Panama Exposition.

In the summer of 1911, Mr. Hahn resigned from the Billboard and became identified with the Universal Film Mfg. Co. After a thorough schooling at Universal City, Mr. Hahn again joined his old chief who had, in the meantime, formed the Industrial Moving Picture Company. When the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company succeeded the Industrial Moving Picture Company, Mr. Hahn became assistant secretary of the new organization.

Fire Prevention Topic is a Subject of Discussion

At the meeting of the Fire Prevention Regulations Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held in New York on September 26th the subject of fire prevention in exchange buildings throughout the country was exhaustively discussed and it was decided that no expense should be spared to make the various company exchange centers as safe as possible. It was agreed also that the ideal method of reaching a 100 per cent safety condition was wherever possible to have buildings constructed especially for the purpose of film storage and distribution.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Picture Business, Same As Any Other

Article on Admissions by F. L. Newman

General Manager of Five Middle West Theatres

(The expressions we are receiving from the managers of leading theatres on the subject of admissions are worth more than careless reading. They should be studied and digested. This one by Mr. Newman is especially worthy of your consideration. There are sentences contained in it which are the words of a prophet. Read to the end and jot down the words of wisdom that you may not forget the dangers and pitfalls that lie ahead on your exhibiting path.)

YOUR first question is, "What are your admission prices?" No doubt you know I have three theatres in Kansas City, the Newman, Royal and Regent. I will give you the prices of admission I am getting at each theatre at the present time and what we received at the two last theatres mentioned when we first opened them.

At the Newman Theatre, we give a performance on par with any theatre in the United States and I am not making this statement to blow my own horn, but people who have traveled from coast to coast and are in the business and not in the business, have made that statement any number of times.

The admission prices at the Newman are 40c. down stairs including war tax. The back of the balcony seats about 600 and are 30c. including tax and the loges in the front part of the balcony are 55c. including tax. The first four rows in the balcony back of the loge seats are 40c. including tax; and we have been told a great many times by our patrons that our prices are entirely too low as we really only get 27c., 36c. and 50c., the other money going to the Government, but personally I would rather show to more people at a lower price than to fewer people at a higher price.

The Royal Theatre has a seating capacity of 600 downstairs and 150 upstairs with admission prices as follows: 22c. downstairs and 33c. upstairs including war tax. It is rather unusual to get more money for seats in the balcony than down stairs, but our balcony is all in loges and individual seats instead of opera chairs and we have every possible appointment in the balcony. We find that many people will buy seats upstairs in preference to the down stairs seats so they can have that extra comfort. Incidentally this balcony was put in after the theatre was built and we never closed the house while erecting this balcony, as the work was all done at night and we kept on opening the theatre at nine o'clock in the morning as usual.

The Regent Theatre has been open three years in March and has an admission price of 22c. including war tax. We opened the theatre for 10c. This theatre is very peculiarly constructed as the lower floor only seats 350 and the balcony 285, and is in the heart of the city.

I think the admission price should be given a great deal of thought. As we continue to increase prices, we are bound to drive away many people who can not afford to pay such high admission. Personally I have always been strong for one admission price, in fact about a year ago I played "INTOLERANCE" at the Royal Theatre which seats 750 people and did not increase prices, but showed this picture for 15c. I believe though that people will pay for something that is worth it, providing you do not get the prices too high. When I hear about $2.00 seats the only place I can think of is New York on Broadway however, as we live we learn and I may change my mind.

What I am afraid of is that we will get our admission prices so high that they will be beyond the reach of the masses. I recall very well when I started in the film business in the Spring of 1907, at that time there was a great deal of discussion that the film business would live forever because it was cheap, the admission was only 5c., and it was a wonderful entertainment for the woman with the shawl, and when we dreamed that some day we would get 10c., that was a hundred per cent increase, it would never go higher than that.

With the cost of film to-day and everyone trying to give the best they can, it is almost impossible for us to have a standard admission price. Your receive your contract price for film where you can show them all for one admission price, but if you want to step out and get something exceptional, you cannot sell your show for the same price, in fact most of the men who have any exceptional production, force you to raise your admission price if you want to run their pictures and the patrons forget what you have always tried to give them in past years. If the man in the next block has something they want to see, they naturally go there.

We must also take into consideration that the dollar is not worth as much to-day as it was three or four years ago, but I do believe that the exhibitors should weigh the admission price a great deal and not increase it to such an extent that they will just cater to the classes instead of the masses.

In every large city in America, there are several vaudeville houses where the prices range from 10c. to 30c. and the people who can not afford to pay such high prices will go to these vaudeville theatres and see five or six acts and a good feature picture. By the way, that is one thing I think the exhibitors should not allow, that is to let the film exchanges furnish vaudeville houses with film and at the same time furnish the same features to strictly picture theatres. That is not fair competition.

I believe that theatres like the Newman should have a standard scale of prices, because first, we get a fairly good admission price and then we must conduct our business just the same as the Orpheum does. I think the small house should also have a standard price, especially when there is an exceptional picture shown where they have to pay three or four times as much as they do for ordinary pictures. Of course every one has different conditions. There are some places where they can put out a flashy front and get business on that, and other theatre men have a certain policy where service is given and a large orchestra, or fine appointments and there is also the theatre that depends solely on the attraction or there is the theatre that depends on advertising alone. My personal opinion is that we should have everything, location, theatre, service, appointments and the attraction. I have always tried to have all of these.

Summing it up, the picture business is nothing more or less than any other mercantile business or any commodity you have to sell. Just the same as if you go into a restaurant and pay 40c for a steak—just a clean, neat little restaurant, but if you go to a fine large hotel you will have to pay $2.00 for the same steak, and the same with many theatres, you can get a larger admission price when you have a large orchestra, wonderful theatre, fine appointments and a good location, but I will say in conclusion that personally I would rather see the admission price within the reach of the masses.

Very truly yours,

F. L. NEWMAN,

President.

Greater Amusement Company, St. Louis, Gives Keenan Picture Big Showing

HERE'S a story of how real, live showmen, each with different ideas on how to exploit a motion picture, put over "The World Aflame," a Frank Keenan special production, in St. Louis.

Harry Koplar, vice-president and general manager of the Greater Amusement Company, was so impressed with the timeliness and the vital forcefulness of "The World Aflame," which deals with the problems of capital and labor, and offers a solution for the dire situation of to-day, that he booked the picture for the entire circuit.

The circuit takes in the new Grand-Florissant, recently erected at a cost of $200,000; the Kings, Pershing, Shenandoah, Lindell and Juniata theatres.

The production was staged day and date by each of these theatres, and the managers of each were told to go the limit in their own way in the exploitation of the picture.

Before the campaign of the six house managers was completed every union labor man in St. Louis and every employer of labor in the city knew of the showing at one or the other of the various theatres.

The entire roster of every union local in St. Louis was circularized. Labor in the Missouri metropolis heartily endorsed the principle of "The World Aflame," and the St. Louis Inquirer, the official union labor journal of Missouri, devoted almost two full pages expounding both the importance of the message the picture carries and its entertainment value.

Capital also received due attention from the exploiters of the Keenan special, and it is safe to assume that every person in St. Louis interested in the acute situation between capital and labor attended the showing of "The World Aflame" at one of the six theatres.

An unusually heavy newspaper advertising campaign was promoted in connection with the showing of the picture. The advertising was a joint affair, being hooked up with the exhibitions at all the Greater Amusement Company's theatres.

No attempt was made to make the exploitation sensational. All the advertising was "safe and sane," and every stunt pulled was legitimate, level-headed showmanship, not actuated by a desire to create undue excitement among unthinking people, but more to arouse the interest of people who could thoroughly appreciate the theory conveyed by the level-headed, clear-thinking mayor of "The World Aflame."

Ralph Thayer promoted the campaign for the Grand-Florissant; Louis K. Sidney, manager-director of the Kings Theatre, handled the campaign for his house; Jim Carter conducted the advertising and exploitation for the Pershing, and J. M. Dubbs for the Shenandoah.

Harry Koplar, general manager of the Greater Amusement Company, was overseer of the entire campaign.

Following the joint exhibition Mr. Koplar issued the following statement:

"The business done on 'The World Aflame' was most gratifying. It is a splendid production, and one which is very timely. Mr. Keenan has endeared himself to the affections of our patrons in these houses more than ever and we look forward in anticipation of another production in which he appears. It is a pleasure to recommend this wonderful picture to all live exhibitors who desire to please their patrons and to promote the motion picture art."

Tie-Ups Reap Rich Harvest for Strand of Cincinnati

THE Strand Theatre of Cincinnati reaped a rich harvest of publicity in the recent showing of Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow."

Some half dozen windows in Cincinnati's mercantile district were secured and elaborate displays were arranged.

First, the "tie-up" with the Corona typewriter, which Miss Burke used in the picture, was made 100 per cent. The Typewriter Company devoted its entire window space to oil paintings and colored photos of Miss Burke with a card telling of the Strand engagement. A bright idea to have a "double" of Billie Burke in the window operating a typewriter was blocked by inability to find a girl who looked like Miss Burke and could operate a Corona. The idea brought publicity, anyway.

The "tie-up" with G. Washington coffee was even more successful than the other. Window displays in a half dozen leading stores — places which had heretofore never gone in for such exploitation — were secured. Among them was the big Government place grocery store of Peebles & Co., which used oil paintings and stills showing Miss Burke serving the coffee and cards tieing up the Strand engagement. The Piggly Wiggly main stores also gave up their main windows, and two of the leading department stores tied up their grocery departments with counter and window displays.

JUST BETWEEN US

WE have on hand many interesting articles on admission prices written by exhibitors which we will publish as soon as the restrictions to our space brought by the printers' strike are removed.

NOW it is the printers who have gone on a strike and the real meaning of "strike" comes home to us. We don't like them.

IN the near future this department will have something to offer that will come as a surprise and we believe a welcome addition to the service we are giving our readers. Watch for it.

Rialto of Augusta Builds Excellent Lobby Display

THE creed of Branham with the Lynch Enterprises over the South, that of publicity extraordinary and novel exploitation in all lines including lobby displays is being learned by the other Lynch employees and if we are to judge by the sample of lobby display which the manager of the Rialto of Augusta, Ga., recently used for his exploitation of "A Daughter of the Wolf," Mr. Branham is proving a good teacher.

A. H. Cobb, Jr., who is the manager of the Rialto has provided one of the best displays we have yet to see coming from a city of the size of Augusta. It is not elaborate nor expensive, yet it certainly would attract attention and present a special invitation to the public to see this picture.

The log cabin was a specially painted drop and hung just in front of the box office so that the cashier sold tickets through the window. Patrons in entering or leaving passed through the door on either side. The top of the lobby was thick with pine and evergreens supported by laced cords and behind these were concealed numbers of green lights. The floor was covered with sand and on top of this was sprinkled a thick coating of powdered mica or imitation snow, with big pine burrs thrown around as if dropped from the trees. On either side of the lobby was a specially painted panel showing a snow scene with white capped mountains in the distance. Over the one sheet frames at the front were big bunches of pine and hemlock with concealed lights. Pine needles, some cotton, and evergreen sprigs completed the atmosphere. As you entered the house the lights were green, carrying out the night effect. We were unfortunate in not having any stage and so were unable to carry out the same scheme here.

The three sheets at each side of the entrance were specially lettered and the letters of the title were "frosted" with mica. At night with the green lights shining through the pines the scene was very realistic.

A lobby display which proved a business producer for "A Daughter of the Wolf."

Kansas City Exhibitor Uses Original Idea For "Bishop's Emeralds"

WIDE awake exhibitors, alert to capitalize on the successful ideas of other showmen, are finding a fertile field for exploitation ideas in both the Virginia Pearson Features, "The Bishop's Emeralds" and "Impossible Catherine."

Although both those features are among the top-line achievements of Virginia Pearson, and have box office value stamped all over them, these live wire exhibitors went after new and extra business to combine their advertising with larger audiences. Needless to say such originality brought results.

Samuel Harding, the resourceful showman of the Liberty Theatre of Kansas City, Mo., when playing "The Bishop's Emeralds" corralled the largest emerald he could locate in a downtown jewelry shop, and explaining his idea to the proprietor, had a neat sign lettered and placed in the show window where the emerald was displayed with the following copy: "Here is one of the biggest emeralds in the world — the others are 'The Bishop's Emeralds' — worn by Virginia Pearson, at Liberty Theatre."

Mr. Harding writes that this exploitation idea, due to the novelty and location, brought many new faces to his theatre. It also sold the jeweler on cooperative ideas with motion picture theatres, because to his surprise, the jeweler sold the emerald from his window.

Two of the theatres which advertised Keenan in "The World Aflame" in unusual ways.

Government Aviator Showers Cleveland With Advertising Darts

ONE of Paul Gusdanovic's Cleveland theatres, the Strand recently put over an exploitation stunt that while not new, the areoplane being a frequent contributor to picture advertising these days, was conductive to a big business for the theater mentioned and demonstrated that Mr. Gusdanovic our latest addition to the Advisory Board is a live manager who recognizes the value of unusual expoitation and is not afraid to spend some money in order to secure it.

Paul Gusdanovic, one of the leaders in film exploitation in Cleveland.

The feature which Mr. Gusdanovic choose for his exploitation stunt was "Destiny" and the stunt was to shower Cleveland with a special advertising "dart" which were distributed from an aeroplane.

Several thousand darts, made of cardboard were printed bearing the words, "Dorothy Phillips in 'Destiny' coming to the Strand Sunday September 21. Watch for it." A former government aviator piloted the ship hired over the city and it rained "Strand" darts on Cleveland.

The big feature of the event was the advertising carried in the Cleveland papers the day before the flight, the ads conveying the message that passes to the Strand would be showered from the heavens. Thus the public was acquainted with the fact that something unusual was to be pulled. The motion picture editors of the town caught the spirit and wrote special articles about the "stunt."

The passes were thrown out, one calling for a season admittance, one for six-months admittance, still another. for three months and five hundred of the five thousand total called for a single admission. The winner of the yearly pass was given a photograph of Dorothy Phillips who stars in "Destiny."

Not satisfied with this unusual attraction Mr. Gusdanovic erected a tent in the lobby of his theatre and obtained the services of two fortune-tellers who gratis, told the fortune of every fiftieth person to pay admission to the theatre.

Some Suggestions For Better Advertising By An Exhibitor

OLIVER T. LANDIS manager of the Lyric theatre of Shippensburg, Pa., has been kind enough to accept our recent invitation to small town managers to contribute to our columns and has the following to say relative to present day advertising aids:

For some months past I have been reading the numerous letters from exhibitors, producers, exchanges and so on and, having a couple of ideas myself that may or may not appeal to others, would like to submit them.

Before entering this business (some five years ago I spent many years in the printing business and when I see my ads in the papers I feel like committing murder. I get fair display in one paper but the other is fierce, and it is simply impossible to get any improvement. To start with we have only two weekly papers coming out one day apart, consequently have to print the whole week's programme in each. When I look over the sample ads printed in The News, I am afraid I get envious, and it has occurred to me that it would be a good idea for the producers to design at least one good ad with type and illustration on a coarse screen that would be suitable to enlarge or reduce leaving the top or bottom or both in such shape that the theatre name and playing date could be added, said cuts made for 1-, 2-, or 3-col.

Another suggestion, why could not the slides be reproduced on coarse screen with the bottom cut off and used for newspaper ads.

Again, take the photos put out by all the producers, they are a little expensive for the small-town man, why not arrange them in an attractive lay-out and print them on a coated paper the size of the regular one-sheets with an artistic border around them, they could be arranged in countless designs and patrons would know at a glance that they were not the same photos they had given a close inspection the day before, as it is not likely that you would get the same design two days in succession.

I believe that the producers have real artists in their employ, and I know that a large number of us could not employ a real artist for this purpose, and I also believe that the producers are sincere in their efforts to help us sell seats and after all is said that is what we are in business for.

In this matter of press sheets we can talk ourselves black in the face and not get anywhere, when we find something in them that suits we say it is all right and when we don't find what we think we would like it is rotten, while another exhibitor will be delighted with that same press sheet.

It seems to me that this matter of ad cuts is all important. If each Exchange had one original cut they could furnish any theatre a duplicate from it in two days and possibly less and they should be furnished at cost of making the duplicate.

McCormick Uses "The Hoodlum" for the Circle's Birthday Booking

S. BARRETT McCORMICK, internationally known as the managing director of the Circle Theatre, Indianoplis Ind., has contributed another dollar-getting idea to the encyclopedia of showmanship, and this time his idea is a most timely chapter and nothing other than —

"What Is the Best Way for Your Theatre to Make More Money."

This treatise of McCormick's, based upon actuality and sometimes brought about by his decision to increase the already gratifying profits of the Circle Theatre, is even more applicable to other exhibitors, and his prescription is even more suited to other theatres than it was to the Circle.

This Circle Theatre, over the destinies of which McCormick presides, had been up against no hard luck games. It had not suffered an attack of non-attendance. It had not been bucking its head against the brick wall of Indifferent Public Attitude.

The Circle's problem was essentially the difficulty of making a great success into an even greater success. And this, be it said, is not listed in the directory of cinches. It is a problem comparable only to that of teaching a cat to swim or a goldfish to walk.

To describe in a few words how McCormick went about accomplishing the exasperatingly difficult would be an injustice to the value of his idea and to the dandy box office results brought about as a result of this idea.

Increased admissions, McCormick reasoned, meant nothing more than increasing public interest. How could he do that? His audiences were large and pleased. What could he do to hold the interest of those that already were steady customers of the Circle Theatre, and to grasp the interest of those who as yet had not been officially enrolled as "Circle fans."

McCormick looked to one movement to bring about this miracle and this was his advertising. Those exhibitors who have consistently followed the various exploits of S. Barrett McCormick as told in Motion Picture News will doubtless find themselves the recipients of sharp pains in the chests when they read that foregoing sentence.

In short, McCormick decided to effect a change in his advertising. It was not a decision to spend less or more money on advertising. It was essentially the matter of changing the tone of it. The average McCormick ad is more artistic than anything else in the newspaper in which it is printed. The word matter is in better English than the majority of text in the newspaper. The general layout of the ad is more carefully planned than 90 per cent. of that which makes up the newspaper.

Not to eschew "quality" but to aim at an entirely different method of advertising a motion picture, was McCormick's plan. He decided to interpret a motion picture in terms of variously-sized newspaper ads. Usually the Circle's ad was not entirely related to the picture. For instance, when "The Hoodlum," starring Mary Pickford was shown at the Circle, the ads talked of this attraction in terms of the Circle's birthday, stating that "The Hoodlum," was just the sort of a picture to grace a birthday program of the Circle.

Then he added some more appropriate reading matter and the result was that Mary Pickford's latest vehicle passed into history at the Circle a financial and artistic winner.

"Better Times" Is a Good Title For Exploitation

"BETTER TIMES" continues to be a feature which admits of some novel advertising.

One of the most brilliant of these campaigns was successfully carried out in Minneapolis and St. Paul in the Strand. As the story is framed about an old "flivver" a series of attractive booklets, posters and cut outs of a fliv were devised and preceding the advent of the showing of "Better Times" the management of these houses had arranged with the merchants, the authorities of the Minnesota State Fair to boost this annual show. One sheet snipe displaying the one slogan "Better Times" covered every available space in the Twin Cities, and the sequent showing of cards in show windows and attractively grouped counters kept up the interest. The actual exhibition of an old flivver resurrected from the scrap heap and entered as a contestant in one of the big prized auto races scheduled at the fair, capped the interest and attention of the public.

Louisville Houses Increase Admissions

In line with other Louisville theatres Fred J. Dolle, manager of the "Alamo" has increased admission prices from 20 to 25 cents at night and from 15 to 20 cents at matinees. The increase in price at the Alamo was instituted in conjunction with "Goldwyn Week," or rather, "Goldwyn Two Weeks," for Manager Dolle ran two solid weeks of Goldwyn and did excellent business despite the Kentucky State Fair opposition.

The Alamo opened with "Lord and Lady Algy," for a three days run, and then put in "The World and Its Women," starring Geraldine Farrar. The second week was begun with Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential," succeeded by Pauline Frederick in "Bonds of Love."

People of Louisville readily accepted Manager Dolle's statement that although producers had increased their rentals from 200 to 500 per cent. the increase in admission at the Alamo was only 25 per cent., and business at the theatre continues as good, if not better, than before the increase.

Dayton Employing Metropolitan Methods Reaps Harvest With "Checkers"

A GLANCE at the photograph of the Columbia Theatre in Dayton, Ohio, shows clearly that the manager of this pretentious house is a keen observer of progress in the film industry and quick to avail himself of advantages offered in the successful exploitation stunts of New York theatres and producing exhibitors.

With the singing of the contract for a run of "Checkers" at the Columbia, the enterprising manager of that house immediately set about spreading the news. Not only to his regular patrons did his announcement go; through the columns of the Dayton press he made known in attractive ads that "Checkers," "the greatest racing drama ever written," was coming to Dayton!

As the time drew near for the showing of "Checkers" this manager showed himself a real "live wire" with a street and neighborhood stunt, using the jockeys, mounted to parade, carrying the theatre banner.

When "Checkers" was originally introduced to Broadway theatregoers, William Fox, the producer, pulled this trick with a half dozen jockeys who paraded throughout the central section of the city, thus making several hundred thousand New Yorkers acquainted with the fact that the picture was to be seen at the Central Theatre. The Columbia in Dayton followed this idea, but added greatly to the novelty by using two girls in jockey costume. This created an immediate and increased interest in the Columbia bill.

In addition to effective novel street stunts, the lobby of the Columbia was tastefully and most efficiently decorated. There were one-sheets and lobby photos showing scenes from the racing play.

Artistically arranged over the box-office the management placed a big cut-out of a horse show with a poster scene in the center. Over all was a beautiful draping of autumn leaves; and an electrically lighted metal sign bearing the name "Checkers" caught the eye and drew the passersby to the window of the box-office.

The line which formed early in the afternoon of the first day's showing became a regular thing during the entire run of the picture. The theatre stands near the center of the block, and a steady stream of patrons kept the box-office line stretched clear to the corner on each day and up to the last performance on the closing night of the run.

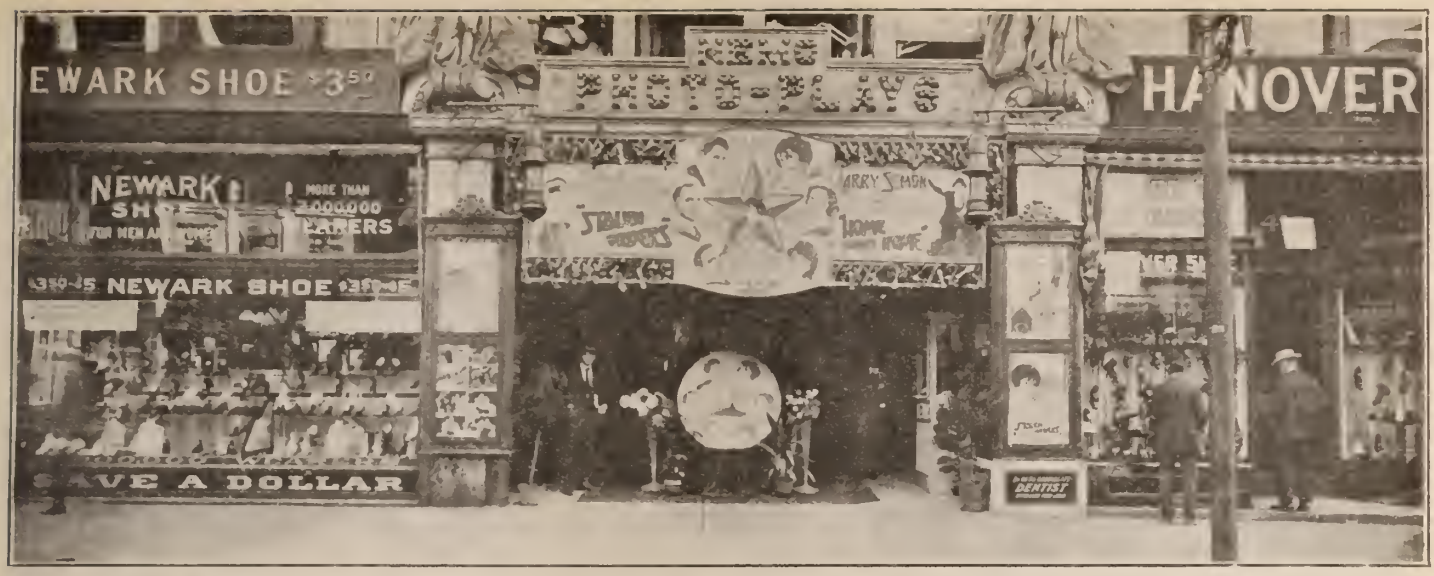
For fourteen days the Columbia played to capacity business with "Checkers," establishing a record for the theatre for run and for box-office receipts, and crowning the efforts of the Columbia management with the greatest success of the year.

A Novel Bit of Exploitation

A novel bit of exploitation for a picture has been evolved by the Strand theatre of Lincoln, Neb. The management listed the names of the married Michaels from the telephone directory and sent postals to the women which bore their names, asking if they were the "Woman Michael Married." Requested to call in person at the theatre she was told in the postal that she might see what happened to Michael.

Bathing Girls Act as Models in Department Store

"YANKEE DOODLE IN BERLIN" and the Mack Sennett bathing girls afford the exhibitor many opportunities for new exploitation and hardly a day passes that something does not come to our attention concerning the public, usually inexpensive, that the film is receiving throughout the country.



Many pictures have big advertising opportunities, but usually there is an undue amount of expense attached in their carrying out, and do not merit the results received.

There are many stunts which have been used in conjunction with this picture and these are being duplicated repeatedly with great success to exhibitors and other parties concerned. Probably the best stunt is the "Yankee Doodle Sale" which is used with department stores. An agreement is made between the store and theatre to hold a sale for which the Bathing Girls are to act as models for suits, dresses, millinery or other merchandise. This attracts considerable since the store advertises the fact in newspapers, arranges prominent window displays etc. This is done without any expense to the theatre whatsoever, and the department stores are more than satisfied to avail themselves of this opportunity.

The most successful interpretation of this idea was at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn. John Manheimer, its owner arranged this stunt with the Heilbronn Department Store, the largest store in that section. The store advertised the sale with full page ads in three papers, devoted two front windows for display, and posted the news throughout the store. The suit department arranged for a model fashion show, furnished music, and the patrons of the store who saw the girls in street clothes, were only too anxious to see them at the theatre in their beautiful bathing costumes.

This is the Nemo Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., where Barclay hangs out night and day thinking of new advertising stunts.

Barclay and the Nemo of Johnstown, Pa., Still Going Strong

ONCE on a time Johnstown, Pa., was only famous for having experienced a great calamity which echoed in newspaper publicity around the world, a flood that practically wiped the whole city off the map and exacted a toll of lives that goes down in history as one of the worst of disasters. Now the city that has grown from the ruins which the wall of water that rushed down the valley, where the old was and new Johnstown is located, destroyed, has a new fame at least in showman circles for it is the home of the Nemo Theatre, which, through the enterprise of its advertising manager, L. W. Barclay, is one of the models for modern photoplay presentation.

The Nemo is always to the fore in its programs, is never afraid to hitch up with a good picture and never seems to fear competition, for Mr. Barclay is confident that his exploitation methods will get the business.

No better example of the adage "It pays to advertise" can be found anywhere in the country than at the Nemo, Johnstown. When other houses in cities of Johnstown's class were worrying along on a shortened expense or closed for the hot weather or keeping open under protest the Nemo was making money, because Barclay never for a moment got scared and keep the standard of his bills up to the high-water mark, which in Johnstown, considering the fact that once the flood went over the tops of the highest business blocks, is some altitude.

When the fall made its appearance on the next page of the calendar Barclay began planning for the Fall season that was to open with a bang, inaugurated by a "Fall Opening" week, an event at the Nemo each year.

"Fall Opening Week" with Barclay is not a formal announcement in the newspaper to that effect, but a time for renewed activity, a tightening of the belt and a polishing of new and approved phrases in publicity to say nothing of the selection of a big bill and a general brightening up about the Nemo, inside and out.

When Barclay has a party he isn't satisfied unless the affair is an event. So it was that when September, 1919, hove into view that the Nemo had all sails set and trimmed.

There was a great big bill prepared for Johnstown picture fans. The newspapers were running big ads telling all about it, special one sheets prepared according to Barclay's ideas of advertising were being used in lieu of the regular paper, the Nemo lobby was specially decorated for the event and a special stage setting waited for the inspection of the Nemo patrons on the stage.

On the opening day every light in the lobby and in the house was changed. Every globe was red, from the street in. The big banner you see at the top of the lobby opening has a border of lattice work, through which are twined rose leaves and roses — artificial, of course. There are some forty 60-watt lamps in this lattice work, with special sockets that make the lamps, which are colored red, blue and green, snap on and off.

The result of Barclay's efforts were even more than he hoped for and he is ever optomistic. Packed houses marked the opening of the week, made the Nemo management joyful for the entire six days, and has continued ever since, matinee and evening, as the fall season progresses.

Barclay and the Nemo should be an inspiration to every exhibitor in the country. Johnstown is just a fair sized good business city. The kind of a town that most exhibitors have in which to work out their destinies in the picture business, but there is more interest in pictures in Johnstown, and especially those shown at the Nemo, the runs are longer at this theatre and it is making more money than many a house which has greater natural advantages. The answer is publicity, coupled with good sense in selecting the programs for the house.

It looks like "The Miracle Man" was standing 'em up in Chicago too if we are to judge from these photographs.

Wholesale Advertising Campaign Introduces "Miracle Man" to Chicago

WITH free tickets snatched from the air by eager fingers, and an airplane hovering low over the principal boulevard dropping still more of these complimentary tickets; a big newspaper, billboard and car card advertising campaign; music store window displays, snipes plastered everywhere; and lucky money to be found in unexpected places, "The Miracle Man" was introduced to the people of Chicago on Sunday, September 14th.

No other photoplay has ever been so auspiciously presented to the picture fans of Chicago. If there is any one in the city who does not know that George Loane Tucker's production of "The Miracle Man" is playing for two weeks at Orchestra Hall he must be in confinement in some asylum or jail, or be deaf and blind.

The advertising campaign started out with 400 one-sheets which sprang up like mushrooms on all the elevated stations in the city, these were augumented by hundreds of cards placed in the suburban cars and heralds mailed broadcast over the city.

Just after these had begun to catch the attention of people using any sort of transportation, machine loads of snipes were sent out in all directions, and every way one turned they were greeted with one-sheets or small posters telling them of the unprecedented production which was to appear at Orchestra Hall on September 14th. Fences, vacant buildings, store windows, trees, electric light posts and every available space large enough to hold a snipe, was plastered over with these announcements.

Next a small boy walking along discovered what he thought was a half dollar laying on the sidewalk. He grabbed it and found instead that it was a lucky piece with the legend on one side, "Have faith. Keep this." The horseshoe impressed upon it proved that it would bring its possessor good luck. When he turned it over on the other side he found the inscription "The Miracle Man is Here." And this small boy was only one of thousands who were finding these lucky pieces in unexpected places. The business man hurrying along to his office in the morning picked one up on State Street, and he was just superstitious enough to drop it in his pocket for he didn't want to spoil his luck by throwing it away. The housewife out for her morning marketing kicked one just as she was entering the store. And so all over the city had been planted thousands of these lucky pieces telling that "The Miracle Man" was in town.

On the supposition that it took a real grand stand play to attract the attention of some people, the day before the opening the biggest "stunt" of all was staged. In conjunction with the Chicago Herald-Examiner the announcement was made that on Saturday September 13th, the Herald-Examiner airplane would fly over the city and drop 2,000 passes to "The Miracle Man." Through the newspaper the people were told just what route the airplane would take and what time it would be in their vicinity — and they were lined up in crowds waiting to see the rain of bright red tickets, good for one admission to Orchestra Hall during the showing of "The Miracle Man." Starting in the suburbs the airplane flew at an elevation of 5,000 feet, but as the air man glided over Michigan Boulevard he descended to a height of only 300 feet and dropped the eagerly sought red passes almost into the outstretched hands of the struggling crowds.

These were just a few of the attention attracting stunts which were pulled off before the first run of the feature at Orchestra Hall. During the two weeks it packed and repacked the theatre, one hundred and twenty-eight United Cigar Stores in all parts of the city were flaunting window displays of posters and stills from "The Miracle Man"; and at Monroe and State streets, one of the business corners in Chicago's downtown district, the Snyder's Song Shop on both the Monroe and State Street sides was decorated with four by twelve foot banners announcing "The Miricle Man" song, and in the window of the store was a singer demonstrating the music, as well as a big display of the music, photographs and other paper advertising the production. As it happens the Snyder Song Shop is directly over one of the United Cigar Stores, so it was a double decker display that greeted the State Street shoppers.

Meanwhile full-page, half and quarter-page advertisements were running in all the newspapers, as well as many editorials called forth by the merit of the production.

Testimonial to Quality of Rothacker Work

AN unsolicited testimonial from Mildred Harris Chaplin has been received by Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. of Chicago. The letter follows:

"It gave me genuine pleasure to learn today from Louis B. Mayer that the Rothacker plant is to make the prints of all my First National pictures.

"This is because I realize that your standard of quality, such as established in Anita Stewart's "Kingdom of Dreams" and Constance Talmadge's "The Temperamental Wife", is essential to the proper production of screen art".

Announcement of Lewis' First for Pathe

Edgar Lewis, who recently signed to produce a series of special features for Pathe productions, has begun the production of his first release, "Other Men's Shoes." This story is by Andrew Soutar, war correspondent.

Mr. Lewis has selected a cast of players who answer in every qualification the demands he always makes upon his performer.

Crawford Kent, one of the best known of leading men, has been assigned the principal parts being accorded a dual role, that of brothers. Others in the cast are Irene Boyle, Edna May Spurl, Bobby Connolly, Phil Sanford, Lillian Amour, Stephen Radmun, Herold Forshay and Jack Shankey. On the whole, this is one of the finest casts chosen for any picture in many months.

Vidor's Production Ideas

"Motion pictures with a principle and not founded upon a specific form of religion has been my endeavor," declared King W. Vidor, creator and producer of the now famous "Turn In The Road," in a statement issued this week.

"I am not trading on the name of any religion although in "The Turn In The Road," "Better Times," "The Other Half," and "Poor Relations" I have incorporated a scientific principle, a principle I might add which has brought peace, contentment and prosperity to many millions of people.

"Each one of my pictures has gone forth on its merits, having no other backing than my name as its producer."

Film Outlook In South Good

Mr. Simpson of Realart Pictures Corporation says Industry in South is Prospering

THE entire South is experiencing a wave of prosperity which will mean many new theatres and improvements for shows now operating in line with the policy of "bigger and better"—films, music, business—according to Ben F. Simpson, field manager for Realart Pictures Corporation. Mr. Simpson is back from a two months' tour of Southern States and he found exhibitors in a happy frame of mind over the excellent weather enjoyed during the summer, the usual hot dry spell being supplanted by plenty of rain.

Mr. Simpson is well known in the South, having been George Kleine's manager at Atlanta, Ga., and handling also the supervision of the New Orlean district. He was for a number of years in theatrical enterprises and became familiar with Texas cities and has many friends in the Lone Star State. Oil has transformed mere villages into wonderfully prosperous cities in some localities, he says, and new picture theatres are opening rapidly. At Dallas the new Realart branch office was opened, Diaz Callahan being installed as manager.

Pronounced activity was noted among the larger theatre owners. Mr. Simpson reports E. H. Hulsey, a well known showman, as having extended his holdings in Texas; and S. A. Lynch, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, he says is reaching out for more theatres. The Saenger Amusement Corporation at New Orleans, which controls theatres in Louisiana and Mississippi is remodeling several of its properties. The corporation's General Manager, Mr. E. V. Richards, Jr., is optimistic and predicts a big business for pictures during the winter months and the opening of the spring season.

All theatre owners, Mr. Simpson declares, feel that the producers have a right to ask higher prices, due to the increased cost of everything entering into the making of films. In line with this they plan almost universally to get more money from their patrons.

Theatres all through the South plan to use more money in exploitation work the coming season than ever before, he says. The reception accorded Realart has been surprising and approval of the extensive publicity and exploitation campaign of the firm was expressed by many theatre men.

Capital Film A Growing Unit

S. L. Barnhard, President, Pleased with Conditions — Will Begin Producing Multiple Reel Features

S. L. BARNHARD, president of the Capital Film Co., returned to Chicago a few days ago from California after an extended visit to the company's studios in Hollywood, very enthusiastic over the work that is being done by his companies of the coast, and exceedingly pleased with conditions in general in the producing end of the company. According to Mr. Barnhard there are four companies working without let-up on short special added attractions, for which the Capital is noted. Western, outlaw, railroads and comedy pictures are being "shot" now, keeping the companies on the jump all day and often at night. The new bathing girl "Pippin Comedies," which will be announced soon, are expected to be big winners for the Capital.

Over $25,000 is being spent for larger production facilities in the Coast plant of the company. It is planned to give the Capital studios one of the largest set departments on the coast.

Although there is an increasing demand for the short special added attractions, the Capital Film Co., according to its president, plans to start producing five, six and seven real features in the near future. No definite plans will be made, however, until C. E. Eckels has finished a proposed tour of the country, during which he will appeal to the exchange men for their views in regard to the longer features. The exchange men will be an advisory board to this new project of the Capital's and not until they are consulted will any concrete plans for the longer features be made.

Levey Makes Picture With New Orleans Settings

After more than a week spent in New Orleans at the head of a company of Universal players, Harry Levey, general manager of the industrial and educational departments of that company, has returned to New York with a series of pictures which are to be embodied in the most pretentious feature his department has as yet released.

Under the supervision of Mr. Levey, the most historic and beautiful locations in New Orleans were made the settings for the story, "The Golden Legend," romance.

Burston Supervising New Serial

No Sooner Finishes With Mystery of "13" Than he Goes to Work on Another, "The Hawk's Trail"

LOUIS BURSTON, president of Burston Films, Inc., writes from the Francis Ford Hollywood studios that "life is just one darned serial after another." He has finished his work of supervising the production of The Mystery of "13," in which Francis Ford starred and which he also directed, and is now busily engaged on a similar job of supervision — the production being a fifteen episode serial, "The Hawk's Trail," with King Baggot as "the Hawk," supported by Rhea Mitchell and Grace Darmond.

As a serial the production is said to be unique, in that each episode is complete in itself, although the running thread of adventure, love and romance binds them all together in the perfect continuity of the serial form. The opportunity which this unusual treatment gives King Baggot, is exactly suited to his protean ability. King has played so many hundred different characters in his stage and screen career that he long ago lost count. He is adding fifteen to the number, however, in "The Hawk's Trail," assuming a different character in each episode. Further to give the effect of completeness to each two-reel story special characters are introduced for each episode who do not appear in any other. These characters are of sufficient importance in each instance as to call for the work of a principal in the cast, so that all told there will be in addition to the star and the two female leads, fifteen special characters and some six or eight principals who appear throughout. The total reaches approximately twenty-five principals, believed to be a record in serial production.

Current Events, News Reels and Animal Comedy to be Used — Pleased Over Booking From World's Largest Theatre

WITH the announcement of the New York Universal Exchange that the International News, the Universal Current Events, news reels and the booking of "The Eternal Triangle" an animal comedy, the Universal company now has six separate pictures booked for the newest and largest theatre in the world — the Capitol on Broadway.

This announcement of the news reel contract is worthy of note. The Capitol management selected the policy of using three news reels. Two of the news reels selected are released through Universal. The animal comedy, a new special feature produced by Universal featuring trained dogs, has been reviewed by a number of critics who have pronounced it a comedy triumph. Other than these pictures are the unreleased production "Blind Husbands" a super-production which is expected to startle the motion picture art from the standpoint of excellent construction, "Paid in Advance" a Dorothy Phillips production, and last but not least the booking of the entire series of the famous Stage Women's War Relief series of twelve short masterpieces.

"If there is any other producer that can show a better record for bookings on the Capitol Theatre let him show his hand" is the statement made by Harry Berman, Universal's general sales-manager.

Credit for Direction

A denial has been received from the Francis Ford studios of an item published crediting Duke Worne with the direction of "The Purple Mask" and "Lucille Love." These, it is stated, were directed by Francis Ford. "The Mystery Ship" was also directed by Mr. Ford.

Payne Story is Bought for Will Rogers

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has just purchased what promises to be an ideal vehicle for Will Rogers, the unique comedian of the screen and the stage, who has become one of the most popular of the Goldwyn stars by reason of his worthy performance in "Laughing Bill Hyde" and "Almost a Husband." The story selected for picture presentation is Will Payne's "The Strange Boarder," published in the Saturday Evening Post in 1915 and widely commented on at that time as a model in the art of story telling, in which the characterization and the plot were equally fine.

Mrs. Strauss, head of the Goldwyn's scenario department in the New York office, recognized the exceptional opportunities offered by the leading character in "The Strange Boarder" for one of Roger's peculiar talents.

The locale of the story varies, but for the most part the action is laid in Chicago and offers a chance for intimate interpretations of strongly individual characters in the great middle western metropolis. Will Payne has created the sort of people with whose humor and sentiment Rogers is thoroughly in sympathy, and he has built up a plot of variety and interest that lends itself to motion picture presentation.

Selznick Announces New Star a Year Ahead

For the first time in the history of moving pictures a star has been announced one year in advance of her first picture.

This unique idea is launched by Myron Selznick, who has signed a contract with Miss Zena Keefe whereby in the Fall of 1920 the Selznick Pictures Corporation will began a series of productions in which this young actress will be starred.

Meanwhile — and this is the part of the arrangement which shows the farsightedness of Mr. Selznick — Miss Keefe will be kept before the picture-loving public constantly. She will have leading roles in at least ten of the Selznick productions between now and the time her first star production is issued. The first of these will be the principal feminine role in support of Owen Moore in his first Selznick picture, "Picadilly Jim," which will be released in November.

Goldwyn's Release List of De Haven Comics

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces a complete list of the Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven Capitol Comedies to be distributed through Goldwyn exchanges during coming months. The list reads: October, "Why Divorce"; November, "Moving Day"; December, "The Little Dears"; January, "A Sure Cure"; February, "Excess Baggage"; March, "Forget Me Not"; April, "Rarebits"; May, "What Could Be Sweeter." All of these comedies are in two reels and they maintain the high standard achieved by the Carter de Havens since their product has been handled by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

General Manager of Metro on West Coast Survey

William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, left New York on Thursday, Oct. 2, for a brief trip to the Pacific Coast. He expects to be gone about four weeks, and while away will make not only a survey of production activities at the new million-dollar Metro studios in Hollywood where the "fewer and better" Screen Classics, Inc., productions are made, but will also drop in on several of the Metro exchanges along the route from New York to California.

Mr. Atkinson is particularly desirous of getting into personal touch with Maxwell Karger, Director General in charge of all production at the Metro studios, as he took with him the manuscripts of the two stage comedies, "Old Lady 31," by Rachel Crothers, and "Some Baby," by Zellah Covington and Jules Simonson, recently purchased by Metro for picturization as Screen Classics, Inc., specials.

Six-Reeler on Market For State Righters

J. Frank Hatch Enterprises, Inc., controlling the world rights, announces to state right buyers "The Price Woman Pays," a six-reel production featuring Beatrice Michelena and Lois Wilson in the stellar roles.

The production is based on the story of "Faust," but, it is said, the modern setting built around the classic and the realistic application of the old tale to present-day life contain an appeal which is distinctly up-to-date.

Named Sales Manager

Joseph Friedberg, of the Carlyle Blackwell Productions Company, has enagaged Walter J. Porges as Sales Manager.

Mr. Porges resigned his position as Assistant Director of Sales in the Select Pictures Corporation to accept what he considers a position of much greater importance with Mr. Friedberg.

New King Baggot Serial Soon

Each Episode Of Series Will be Complete Film Story — Star Well Known Throughout Country

WHILE for some months it has been definitely known in film land that King Baggot was making a serial under the supervision of Louis Burston, president of Burston Films Inc., the first definite announcement of the nature of the production was given out at the offices of the producing company, in New York.

There is perhaps no better known star than King Baggot and certainly none that has played a greater variety of parts or who has created more original characterization.

Advantage of King's protean abilities was taken by Nan Blair who wrote the scenario and the result is a serial which differs widely from all previous productions in that each episode of the series of 15, comprises a featurette in itself. The whole is a novel sequence of mystery and adventure stories with wonderful opportunities for the central figure, King Baggot.

No title having been given the production, it is known at the studio as the King Baggot Serial. Some four episodes have been filmed or are now being edited and titled. The all-star cast in support of the noted star has been supplied by the director, Woodrow Van Dyck. These include Reah Mitchell, playing the lead, with Grace Darmond as her sister; Stanton Heck, Harry Lorraine, Fred Windemere and Walter Belasco. In addition to these players who will take part continuously throughout the serial, Mr. Burston is arranging to engage specially one or more prominent picture players to portray special roles, each appearing for one episode only.

First of these to be engaged are George Seigmann and Carl Stockbridge. Upon this novel foundation is being built the production that for novelty and continued interest has rarely ever been equalled.

When the scenario for this noval serial was first shown to Mr. Baggot, he made suggestions which both producer and director gleefully accepted. The result of King's thought is that he has been provided with what is a real protean role for in each of the 15 episodes he portrays an entirely different personality.

Writing from the Coast, Mr. Burston says: "Without divulging the key-note of the serial I can say that Miss Blair in her script has written a most dramatic and interesting story of mystery, adventure and detection of crime; the whole being modern in atmosphere and characterizations.

Blackton Film Listed by Pathe

"The Moonshine Trail" First of Series he will Produce is Scheduled for Release Week of Oct. 20

HEADLINING the Pathe program for the week of October 20th is J. Stuart Blackton's initial production under his recent contract with the Gold Rooster organization, "The Moonshine Trail."

In addition to introducing the Blackton product to Pathe exhibitors, "The Moonshine Trail" will bring together again those popular co-stars, Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon.

Gordon was on the way to the apex of success when he entered the United States army, and his work in the newest Blackton feature is sufficient indication that he lost none of his studio skill while pointing three inch field pieces.

Miss Breamer has appeared consistently in high-class features for nearly three years, and to-day is one of the most popular young actresses contributing to the uplift of the silent drama.

"The Moonshine Trail" is a story of life among the sturdy mountaineers of Kentucky, and of the rugged existence in New York City, coursing with the type of red-blooded drama which has brought fame to Mr. Blackton. The plot is the work of Mr. Blackton and his scenario chief, Stanley Olmsted.

The motion picture fan who craves action will find it aplenty in "The Moonshine Trail" it is claimed. Among other stirring incidents there is a combat between a band of moonshiners and government agents, so real in its setting and its illusion as to be absolutely free of the stagey atmosphere often found in such events in motion pictures.

Miss Breamer and Mr. Gordon are supported by an able cast, which includes the great comedy team of "Lefty" Alexander and Eddie Dunn, who have earned an enviable reputation since joining forces with Commodore Blackton.

Fanny Rice, celebrated light opera prima donna of Broadway fame some few years ago, has a strong comedy role.

Much stress was laid by Commodore Blackton on the humorous side of the story, to afford the proper relief for the drama, which constitutes a large part of the attraction.

"The Moonshine Trail" is the forerunner of a series of productions which Mr. Blackton will make during the ensuing year for Pathe. The first of the series is to be followed by "Dawn," which was written by Elinore Porter, author of "Pollyanna."

Regina Quinn Has Lead in O. Henry Film

Regina Quinn will have the leading part in "The Church With the Overshot Wheel," the next O. Henry story to be picturized by Vitagraph in two-reel form. Others in the cast will include W. H. Turner, William Corbett, Grace Ashley, A. Haywood, Dick Martin and Amy Renley. Joseph Byron Totten will direct.

First Cuckoo Comic Seen Oct. 11

United, Which is Handling the Release of the Dintenfass Product Reports a Heavy Demand

THE volume of inquiries and requests for bookings of the Cuckoo Comedies recently reported received by Mark M. Dintenfass, producer of these two-reelers, has been largely increased following the announcement of the acquisition of the featurettes by United Picture Theatres, Inc., according to a statement from United's contract department this week. The knowledge that the field for the Cuckoo Comedies would thus embrace the extensive chain of theatres, approximately three thousand in number, served by United releases is reported to have been a factor in intensifying the demand for the Dintenfass series, the prevailing idea appearing to have been that with this large connection to cover early application was advisable if participation in the first distribution of prints was to be ensured.

Commenting on the gratifying activity on the part of exhibitors anxious to give the Cuckoo Comedies early presentation Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of United, said in part: "There is no question that, given quality of product, there exists a lively demand for short subjects everywhere among exhibitors, who reflect in turn the taste of their clientele and patrons." Mr. Dintenfass' reputation for quality product has had its influence in the widespread demand we have received and are still receiving, and after seeing the first three of the series I can confidently state that that producer has gone himself one better in the Cuckoo Comedies. They are fast and funny, the subjects are new and up-to-date, and yet clean and wholesome throughout the theme. The fact that some of the comedies are in black-face lends variety to the treatment, and as an added feature sight should not be lost of the beauty contingent supplied by the feminine side of the supporting cast led by Jobyna Ralston.

The first release will be in October. United reports with "Starting Out in Life," featuring Bobby Burns. Other numbers announced as already completed are "All Out of Luck" and "Ball Bearing But Hard Running."

Territorial Print Quota Attained

Hodkinson Offices State That "Desert Gold" was Disposed of by Four Branches in Short Order

IT is not always the case that a picture's success is determined or indicated by the quickness of its bookings by the big first run houses, but that is a pretty safe yardstick by which to measure. News comes this week from the W. W. Hodkinson organization that four of the larger branches of the company had sold the full territorial quota on "Desert Gold," the first Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner Zane Grey picture within twenty days after the first receipt of "Desert Gold" prints in the branches.

In a contract sense the success of "Desert Gold" has been immediate. With audiences it has more than doubled the success of any of Zane Grey's previous novels and another producer who previously had made big records with a Zane Grey production was quick to welcome the advent of so fine a picture as "Desert Gold" because, as he says, "this picture will increase the value of my own production."

There has been instant demand from the larger exhibiting factors of the United States for "Desert Gold" and its box-office power has been even more surprising because Zane Grey has drawn so heavily in the past that exhibitors wondered whether he could still further increase his following. The reason for this increase is clearly evident in the picture itself and in the unusual direction and production that Messrs. Hampton & Warner have given it.

In Chicago, where so-called Western pictures or stories with a Western atmosphere have long been taboo because of a fancied objection to them by the public, "Desert Gold" broke all existing records for patronage at the Pastime Theatre in the Loop and then duplicated this success by bringing big business to all of the Lubliner and Trinz and Ascher Brothers houses, the two circuits playing it day and date. There has been a rush for bookings from the Chicago territory, announcement being made during the week of contracts closed with: the Park, Champaign, Ill.; the Auditorium, South Bend, Ind.; the West Galesburg, Galesburg, Ill.; the Grand, McComb. Ill.; the Palm, Rockford, Ill.; the Castle, Bloomington, Ill.

Denver quickly closed every city and key point in its territory behind the first run of the picture at Talbot's America Theatre, contracts having been closed for: the Grand, Pueblo, Col.; and the Lyric, Sterling, Colorado.

Six Macauley Photoplays for Release by World

The success obtained by "When Bearcat Went Dry," a picturization of Charles Neville Buck's novel which on its pre-release bookings has so far earned over $60,000 has encouraged its sponsors, Macauley Photoplays Inc. to produce six more pictures which will be known as "The Bearcat Series." The World Film Corporation who is handling "When Bearcat Went Dry" has signed contracts with Macauley Photoplays to perform a similar service for the new pictures. The first of these series has been adapted for the screen by George McClymont from George Allan's novel, "The Gift Supreme." Bernard Durning, who won honors in the role of Bearcat will be starred. His leading woman will be Seena Owen, who lately came into prominence in "The Life Line" in which she was featured by Maurice Tourneur. Others in the cast are Melbourne McDowell who co-starred for many years with Fannie Davenport in "La Tosca," "Fedora" and other Sardou dramas. Included in the list of well-known screen favorites are Jack Curtiss, William V. Mong, Harry Spingler, Dick Morris, Lillian Langdon, Claire McDowell and Anna Dodge.

Well Known Players are in Bert Lytell's Cast

In selecting the players to support Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way," the Screen Classics, Inc. production of Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated novel, Metro has picked a well-balanced cast.

The cast for the screen production of "The Right of Way," in addition to Bert Lytell, the star, includes Carmen Phillips, herself a star in her own right; Frank Currier, Antrim Short, Gibson Gowland, Henry Harmon, Virginia Caldwell and Larry Steers.

Exchange For Metro

A new building, expected to be ready for occupancy by February 1 of the next year, is to be erected at Franklin and Chippewa Streets, Buffalo, for housing the Buffalo branch of Metro Pictures Corporation, together with the exchanges in that city of Vitagraph and World Film.

Simplex Notes

TEXAS TOWN 100% SIMPLEX

By the installation of two Simplex Motor Driven Projectors at the Jewel Theatre, Ennis, Texas, the entire town is now 100% Simplex, a total of four machines in the past month being installed in various houses in this community. The Jewel Theatre is owned and managed by Mr. John Sayeg, a well-known exhibitor of the "Lone Star State," and the projection now maintained at this comfortable and cozy little theatre can not be excelled in the theatres of the cosmopolitan cities.

In the town of Lufkin, Texas, the Lufkin Theatre also installed two Simplex Type "S" Motor Driven Projectors, replacing two other types of machines, one of which had only been used two months. The Lufkin Theatre is a well-known establishment of which Mr. W. C. Binion is the owner and manager.

The Olympic Theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, is also one of the most progressive theatres in Texas. This is an eleven hundred seat house owned by Messrs. Dye, Ford & Rodgers. Mr. H. Ford is the manager and his latest action in perfecting the projection at this theatre was the installation of two Type "S" Motor Driven Projectors.

The Rialto Theatre, Electra, Texas, owned by the Grand Theatre Company, of which Mr. Sykes is manager, is a nine hundred seat house and has also recently installed two motor driven Simplex projectors.

The Opera House, Temple, Texas, is about to open under the banner of the Royal Enterprizes with Mr. Willby as House Manager. Two Type "S" Motor Driven Simplex Projectors are here installed, replacing two other types of machines.

The Lone Star Theatre, Ranger, Texas, with a seating capacity of five hundred, has also installed two Type "S" Motor Driven Simplex Projectors. The Lone Star is operated by the Cole Bros., with Mr. H. W. Cole as manager.

Manager McKnight of the Milford Theatre, Milford, Texas, has also purchased a Type "S" Simplex Projector. This is of the motor driven type and the interest shown thus far in the improved projection speaks well for the success of this theatre, which is owned by Messrs. Wilson & McKnight and has the backing of local business men. The Milford has been regarded as a failure up to the present time, but it is expected that with the new interest, equipment and support the old hoodoo of failure has been successfully and permanently banished.

In the town of Athens, Texas, the Dixie Theatre owned and managed by N. C. Dorhandt, installed one Type "S" Simplex Motor Driven Projector. The Dixie is a five hundred and fifty seat house and opened to an exceptionally large audience. The folks of Athens are very proud of this theatre, which is regarded as complete in the matter of decoration and equipment, as are many of the larger houses in Texas. Mr. Dorbandt has been chosen as the projectionist.

All of the foregoing installations have been made through the Dallas, Texas, office of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, of which Mr. E. J. Callahan is local manager. The large and increasing numers of Simplex sales in and around this territory has been highy gratifying not only to Mr. Lucas, whose main office is located in Atlanta, Ga., but also to the builders of the Simplex Projector.

Joins Exploitation Firm

A recent announcement welcomed in Chicago moving picture circles was the statement of Willis & Eckels, producers of Filmcraft trailers, that Irving Mack, Chicago's well known press agent and exploitation man, had become a partner in the company which will hereafter be known as "Willis and Eckels and Mack." Their products from now on will be Fileraft, Adcraft and Printcraft. The branches of the company are capable of handling the publicity, advertising, artwork, printing, engraving and makeup of any concern desiring productive advertising.

Mix's Fox Contract Extended

New Productions for Cowboy Star Being Planned — Next Picture to be Shot in Wilds of Arizona

TOM MIX, "Daredevil of the Screen" has signed a new contract for five years more with Fox Film Corporation. Word has just reached the home office from Los Angeles that Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox organization, who is visiting the West Coast studios, has concluded a new contract with the popular Western star.

The conclusion of the negotiations assures to the public a continuance of the interesting dramas of the West in which Mix has won his way to fame and the hearts of motion picture lovers all over the country.

With the signing of the contract comes word of increased activity in the production of Mix pictures. It was made known that Mix will leave Los Angeles in a few days for Arizona, where a Western town has been built especially for his new releases. A big expansion of Mixville, at Silver Lake near Hollywood, is under way, additional land and several hundred more horses having been bought. Three mountain lions, bears and other animals are being shipped to Mixville. This augurs well for a new supply of Mix thrills.

Mixville will also have its own harness shop, gunsmithy and other important additions in keeping with its enlarged operations.

Several big stories have been bought for the star, among them Max Brand's famous novel, "The Untamed". This is an extraordinarily sensational novel and a tremendous screen production is promised.

Tom Mix has forged ahead rapidly in Fox features. His work in "Rough Riding Romance", released in August, will probably be long remembered; yet his achievements in that feature are said to be outdone in his forthcoming "The Speed Maniac", while still greater things are foreshadowed for "The Daredevil" and "The Feud".

Marjorie Daw in Neilan Cast

Little Star is to Have a Fine Opportunity in his Forthcoming Production "The Eternal Three"

MARSHAL Neilan's initial independent production to be released through the First National Exhibitors Circuit, "The Eternal Three," Marjorie Daw will be given her heaviest dramatic character since she began her youthful career as a motion picture actress. The part which Miss Daw is slated to portray in "The Eternal Three" is that of "Naida," the little Western waif who plays such an important part in the book, "Bob Hampton of Placer," on which the production is based.

"Naida" is the protege of "Old Man Gillis" in the original story by Randall Parrish. In the first part of the story she loses her guardian in a skirmish with the Indians and is rescued, after many anxious situations, by Bob Hampton. Her future is placed in the hands of Hampton, who is a dishonorably discharged army man, but the exceptional qualities of the man, despite his record as gambler and a questionable character, in time win the girl's love. A string of dramatic situations are presented with a climax which discloses the fact that Hampton is the girl's own father. The reputation of Hampton is finally re-established in several tense moments culminating with Custer's Last Fight, in which he meets with a glorious death beside the famous General who had years ago condemned him.

Tom Mix, Fox's cowboy star, who is popular from coast to coast

In practically every scene in which Miss Daw will appear, she will be called upon to express great dramatic feeling and it is felt by many that this part undoubtedly offers her the greatest histrionic opportunity of her career.

Miss Daw is particularly enthusiastic over the fact that she will portray the part of "Naida" on the screen and fully realized that it opens up for her a rare opportunity.

Work on Kay Laurel's Feature Nears End

Kay Laurel, whose last appearance in the silent drama was opposite Wally Reid in "The Valley of the Giants" and whose success in Rex Beach's "The Brand" was one of the big hits of the picture, is now on her third week of work in the first of the series of productions under the direction of Jack O'Brien. Miss Laurel portrays the part of a half-breed Indian girl.

J. M. Shear, of Shear and Company, producing the Laurel features, announces that Miss Laurel's first story is by one of America's best known playwrights and producers for the speaking stage.

Chaplin's "Carmen" Revamped

Victor Kremer to Exploit it in City and on Road as State Rights Picture

VICTOR Kremer, who has recently established headquarters in New York for his State right activities, made an announcement of importance this week regarding "Carmen" starring Charlie Chaplin. This Chaplin feature, which Kremer controls for territorial distribution, is the most important of the series made by the famous laugh-getter during his connection with Essanay. The picture, an extravagant burlesque on the famous opera of the same title, presents Chaplin in the character of a Spanish soldier, marking the only time the comedian has ever forsaken his well-known shoes, cane and short coat. It is said that in order to insure the perfection of "Carmen" as a real Chaplin vehicle, the picture was originally filmed in more than 16,000 feet, of which less than 4,000 feet is actually used. It contains a cast of well-known screen comedians, including Ben Turpin, Edna Purviance and Wesly Ruggles, now a well-known director.

Mr. Kremer has conceived a novel scheme for the exploitation and presentation of "Carmen" in New York, which will be carried out as soon as it is possible to secure a theatre of the proper seating capacity, which is expected within the next two weeks. He will also execute this plan in connection with several road shows of the Chaplin attraction, which he will send on tour throughout the country following the Broadway presentation.

"Carmen" will be offered in New York as a special attraction in conjunction with a company of Spanish dancing girls, a well-known "Jazz Orchestra" and as a special added feature Carmenita, a famous Spanish terpsichoren artiste, who has appeared in opera and as a vaudeville headliner. The entire offering will be known as "Charlie Chaplin and the 'Carmen' Spanish Dance Revue." The company will consist of ten pretty girls, the Jazz Orchestra of twelve pieces and Carmenita. A special song, written in the burlesque vein, is also being prepared and will be rendered by the chorus of girls in connection with the Spanish Revue.

Mr. Kremer states that he has been in receipt of innumerable inquiries for booking for this attraction from some of the largest theatres in the country. He will announce within the next few weeks the details of his plans for sending "Carmen" on tour in those States which have not been disposed of by him to various territorial purchasers. The Broadway offering of the Chaplin feature will mark the first activities of Kremer's recently enlarged organization, which it is believed, will become an important factor in State right circles.

Parson's Executors Appointed

Death of Comedian and Producer Will not effect "Lightning Bryce." Arrow Film Announces Sales

WORD has just been received by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, from Joe Brandt, general representative of the National Film Corporation of America, Inc. that despite the sudden death "Smiling Bill" Parsons, who was president of the National Film Corporation of America, Inc. "Lightning Bryce", the new fifteen episode serial being produced for the Arrow Film Corporation will be completed at once.

Joe Brandt will leave at once for Los Angeles and will personally supervise the finishing of this serial. There are but a few more episodes to be completed and these will be finished by the first of November so that the entire fifteen episodes will be ready for release at that time.

Isadore Bernstein and William La Plante have been appointed executors of the estate of William Parsons and assurances have been received in New York from them that the affairs of the National Film Corporation of America, Inc. will be continued as formerly.

Ann Little and Jack Hoxie, the stars of "Lightning Bryce" are both anxious to conclude their work in "Lightning Bryce" for they are anxious to see the completed story. Both have taken a great deal of pride in the making of "Lightning Bryce" and are determined to see that it is finished in a way that will reflect great credit upon themselves as well as upon their late employer, Mr. Parsons.

The Arrow Film Corporation announces that it has sold the entire foreign rights on "Lightning Bryce" with the exception of England and that over one half of the American territory has been sold and it is regrettable that Mr. Parsons did not live to see one of his pet plans fulfilled.

A Sales Correction

The offices of Joseph Friedberg announced a few days ago that they had purchased the world foreign right to five Taylor Holmes feature pictures, namely, "Its A Bear," "Three Black Eyes," "A Regular Fellow," "Upside Down," and "Taxi" This was an error of Mr. Friedberg's publicity department, and the foreign rights for these pictures were purchased by Mr. Friedberg exclusive of Canada, South America, and Australasia.

Trenton to Appear Opposite Viola Dana

Pell Trenton has been engaged to play the leading male role opposite Viola Dana in the Japanese fantasy, "The Willow Tree," her next Screen Classics, Inc. picture, now under production at the Metro studios in Hollywood. This special will be released by Metro.

Campaign for "Right to Happiness"

"We want to exploit 'The Right to Happiness' as widely as anything we ever played." That was the opening paragraph of the letter sent to the managers of the Loew New York theatres by N. T. Granlund, special exploitation expert for Marcus Loew.

This may be taken as a tribute to the production itself and the outline of the exploitation plans to be used in the Loew theatres in the Metropolitan district is one of the most extensive ones ever made by an independent exhibitor.

All of the Loew orchestras will be provided with a special overture, the same that was used at the Park Theatre on Columbus Circle at the Premier Eastern showing of "The Right to Happiness."

The Loew circuit began the showing of "The Right to Happiness" on Monday, October 6, the day after the close of a successful run at the Park Theatre.

"Tempest Cody" Series is Attracting Attention

A series of two-reel Western productions, attracting favorable comment among first-run exhibitors, is the "Tempest Cody" series, starring Marie Walcamp. The series, which portray the events in the life of a Western girl, was released on September 1.

Since the date of the release, at least thirty requests from Universal exchanges to rush extra prints have been received at the Universal home office. This is believed to be a record in the booking of short subjects.

The "Tempest Cody" series has been widely advertised; and the name of Marie Walcamp is familiar to movie enthusiasts from coast to coast.

Directing May Allison

Herbert Blache is directing May Allison in "The Walk Offs," the smart-set comedy she is picturizing for Screen Classics, Inc.

Bookings on Big "Flying A" Film Sweep Country

From the reports of "Six Feet Four" bookings that are flooding American's home office in Chicago, it is becoming daily more and more manifest that the advance estimates of the success in store for this first big "Flying A Special" were not overstated. Although just put into circulation, it is already sweeping its way from coast to coast and gaining momentum with every day, according to reports.

The records show that a number of the exchanges have already exceeded their maximum quotas of playing dates, and from several quarters comes the frenzied call for additional prints, with the positive guarantee that they can be kept working solid merely on the strength of applications already in hand.

Among the more important circuits recently put down for a showing of the filmed version of Jackson Gregory's popular novel is the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate, managed by Finkelstein & Ruben.

H. S. Nolan, Treasurer of the W. H. Swanson Amusement Company, has signed his name to a contract which guarantees a first run view of "Six Feet Four" to all the Swanson houses in Pueblo, Greeley and Grand Junction, Colo.

Realart Sign Sets New Mark for Broadway

The Realart Picture Corporation has introduced a novel and effective attraction in the world of scintillating electric signs that fringe the edges of the Great White Way. The big sign just erected by the Realart Pictures is atop of the Hotel Hermitage at Seventh Avenue and Forty-Second Street. The sign was constructed by the O. J. Gude Company. The rental price is estimated at $108,000 for three years.

The design consists of a huge border of brightly colored flowers that extend from cupids at the upper corners of the sign. Winking lights give the effect of flowing hues and strikingly enhance the color values. Inside this border are displayed the names of Realart stars in huge letters that flash intermittently.

The feature of the display is a "swinging girl" who traverses the 96 feet across the sign, 26 times every minute, swinging to and fro with natural lifelike motions.

New Travelventures are Planned by J. L. Lasky

Lovers of the big outdoors and those who take a keen interest in the wild life of the less civilized corners of the world have a genuine treat in store when, as announced by Jesse L. Lasky, the first Paramount-Philbrook Travelventures are released. This will not be for some time because Edward H. Philbrook and his party are just leaving for Alaska to make the first half dozen pictures of this series, each of which will average eight hundred feet in length and will be so produced as to carry the audience on the trip with the intrepid travelventures into the wilderness of the Northland.

Vita English Manager Arrives

Much Interesting News Revealed in His Interview by News Representative

IT was Vitagraph films which converted members of England's royal family into movie fans. The authority for this statement is John Pearson, manager of Vitagraph's film renting department in Europe, with headquarters at London.

Mr. Pearson arrived in New York on board the Aquatania recently for a conference with Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph. It is his first trip to this country.

The visitor will make a tour of the Vitagraph exchanges in this country with John M. Quinn, general manager, and will leave for England October 2nd on board the steamship Mauretania.

In an interview on the condition of the picture industry in England, Mr. Pearson incidentally revealed that King George, Queen Mary, the Princess Mary and the royal sons are all earnest motion picture devotees, and that it was largely due to Vitagraph films that these notables became won over to that form of entertainment.

"The royal family holds private film exhibitions in Buckingham Palace almost regularly twice a week," he said. "Princess Mary and the Prince of Wales also attend one of the big film theatres once or twice a week. This has been going on for several years. Before that royalty, as well as nearly all fashionable people of England looked down upon films."

Mr. Pearson's statements revealed some interesting points: "England, and in fact all Eropean countries, are years behind America in booking facilities, and they are all many years behind in production. However, they are beginning to take up the film industry seriously, and will gradually catch up at least in distribution.

"Production has been hampered in Europe greatly by the tremendous high cost. A film that could be made for $10,000 in America would cost $20,000 on the other side.

"Film exhibitions are capable of drawing a much higher admission fee in England than America. The best film theatre in London, the one patronized by the nobility, charges ten shillings sixpence, which is equivalent to over $2.50 in American money."

Mr. Pearson agreed with Mr. Reader that serial productions are coming into great vogue in England. He declared that comedies also made a great appeal to the British public.

"Larry Semon makes a tremendous hit with the British," said Mr. Pearson. "I think that British appreciation of film humor is just as high as the American. I must say, however, that the slapstick type of comedy wins favor there more readily than the more polite, subtle kind. The Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies used to have fair vogue, but not as complete a reception as the more gymnastic subjects such as those starring Charlie Chaplin and Larry Semon."

Capital's Sales Head in New York

F. L. Smith, sales manager of the Capital Film Co., left Chicago last week for New York where the sales department of this concern will be located in the future. Mr. Smith will have established the main sales headquarters by the end of this week. The rapidly increasing expert business of the company will also be handled from this office. The executive offices of the company will remain in Chicago, H. E. Belford, assistant sales manager, will be the sales representative at the Chicago office and will handle the surrounding territory.

World Lists A Gypsy Picture

"Romany" was Taken Abroad With Some Characters Members of Real Gypsy Band in Scotland

SOME months ago World Pictures announced that negotiations were pending whereby it would have the distribution in this country of a number of productions supervised by American directors of stories that required, in order to truthfully picturize the scenes, they be made in foreign lands. For many years a prejudice has existed in this country against so called foreign pictures. The reason as explained by World is obvious. The methods employed by European directors were such that they did not appeal to American audiences. The technical and artistic treatment was so different to our ideas of a good picture that these so called foreign productions did not appeal to our exhibitor and his patrons. The sending of American troops abroad and the termination of the World War lifted the geographical boundaries of our interest. We have become a nation of international importance and our views are international in scope, hence the old boundary lines no longer survive. There is every reason in a high class and expensive production with its scenes laid outside our own country that they be taken in the locale demanded by the story.

For the last three months a number of big producing companies have announced the sending abroad of their directors and actors to make pictures on the scenes called for by the stories. These are all projects still in process of consummation. World Pictures, anticipating by many months this new order of things, had the foresight to arrange for the completion of interesting productions that would not have the hackneyed and worn-out scenic environment that has become uninteresting through repetition to the millions of patrons of moving picture theatres.

The first of these productions to be distributed by World Pictures is "Romany" a five reel picture. It is the first made in which real gypsy camps and gypsy life were utilized to the highest advantage in the picturization of the story. The reason that "Romany" was made abroad was because we have not in this country the gypsy life so familiar to those who have resided abroad. F. Martin Thornton, the director, spent three months with his actors, living and traveling with a band of gypsies in Scotland. He thus was able to give to the screen a perfect picture of the most interesting race of nomads known to civilization. He has combined the unique custom of these people with modern life, together with the beautiful scenery of the Highlands of Scotland, a land that is filled with historical romance familiar to millions of readers of the works of Scott, Barrie and other illustrious authors.

"Romany" will be released by World Pictures as a special within the next two weeks.

Demand For Hallmark Series

Famous Directors Group Bookings Satisfactory — "A Dangerous Affair" to be First Release

REPORTS coming to the home office of Hallmark Pictures Corporation from the exchange managers indicate that Charles Miller's first production releasing by Hallmark on the Famous Directors' series, of which there will be twenty-six within the year, is meriting the confidence placed in these pictures by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark.

The first Miller production to come under the Famous Directors' series was "A Dangerous Affair," starring Florence Billings and Herbert Rawlinson with Stuart Holmes, Warren Cooke, Vinton Friedly, Regina Quinn and Ernest Torrence in an all-star supporting cast. So great has been the demand for this feature that exchange managers are asking for additional prints on same, stating in their reports that the picture is booking, in some instances, in three and four houses in the same cities. The second Miller production under the Famous Directors' series is "Love, Honor and (?)," starring Florence Billings. This will be released October 15th. The one to follow "Love, Honor and (?)" is a J. Searle Dawley production, "The Phantom Honeymoon," starring Marguerite Marsh. In between these releases come the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth episodes of the Hallmark serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," starring Ben Wilson, and a two-reel special Western drama "Through The Roosevelt Country With Roosevelt's Friends," produced under the auspices of the Roosevelt Memorial Association under the direction of Hermann Hagdorn.

Eckels Appointed General Manager of Capital

S. L. Barnhard, President of the Capital Film Co., upon his return from California a few days ago, announced that C. E. (Eddy) Eckels had been appointed General Manager of the Capital Film Co., the appointment taking effect the day of the announcement.

"There are few men in the moving picture business," said Mr. Barnhart a few days ago, "that know the game as thoroughly as Mr. Eckels. He is a man who has had practical experience in nearly every branch of the business and is one of the best liked and well known men in the industry. The Capital Film Co. is fortunate in having a man like Mr. Eckels, such a capable man, as the acting director of the company's progress. He is largely responsible for the organization's rapid growth, for he is tireless in his efforts for the company's betterment."

Paramount Issues Initial Screen Educator Issue

TO stimulate co-operation between the public and exhibitors showing the better class of pictures, and to extend the use of motion pictures as an educational force, the publicity department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has begun the publication of The Paramount Screen Educator, a monthly magazine, which will be distributed to clergymen, educators, women's clubs' leaders and others who may be interested in the wider use of films. The first copy of the magazine is out this week.

The first number, which is of sixteen pages, is amply illustrated with scenes from photoplays and educational subjects that are ready for non-theatrical distribution. There are articles on "Teaching Through the Eye," by Carl H. Carson, an educational authority who is on the staff of the non-theatrical distribution department; "Co-operation — and Better Pictures," a plea for community leaders to get behind exhibitors who show clean, uplifting motion pictures; "Club Women and the Films," by Rose Tapley, which shows clubwomen how they can make further use of motion pictures; "The Moving Pulpit," an article on the church and its use of the motion picture; "Non-Theatrical Film Distribution," "Entertainment That Instructs," and others.

It is planned to increase the circulation of The Paramount Screen Educator monthly until it reaches 100,000 copies.

All Territory Sold on "Yankee Doodle"

Sol Lesser announces that the state-rights to "Yankee Doodle In Berlin" and the Mack Sennett Bathing Beauties has been sold for the entire country.

Mr. Lesser wishes to emphasize the stability and standing of each of the state-right buyers, and from reports received on the success of the attraction, the confidence he had in this extraordinary feature is verified.

Victor Kremer Opens Headquarters Here

Victor Kremer, one of the prominent distributors of the state right field, who up to the present has made his headquarters in Chicago, has decided to considerably broaden the scope of his interests in the state right field. To this end Mr. Kremer announced this week that he would establish permanent offices in New York City, having secured a large amount of floor space at 130 West 46th Street, where he will install complete exchange facilities, an experienced sales force and a publicity, advertising and exploitation department. The last-named department will be at the disposal of all state-right buyers who handle the various attractions of the Kremer offices, and will supply consistent and intelligent help in the matter of exploitation to buyer and exhibitor alike. Bert Ennis, well known for his handling of the Petrova series, "The Warrior," and more latterly the S-L picture, "Virtuous Men," has been engaged to supervise the work of the publicity department for Mr. Kremer. While waiting to occupy his new quarters in the Leavitt Building, which will not be available for some time, Kremer will make his offices at 105 West 40th Street.

Cuckoo Comics Set For Release; Big Demand

Set for release October 19th, the first issue of the series of monthly two-reel Cuckoo Comedies, featuring Bobby Burns, will be "Starting Out In Life," United Picture Theatres of America announces. The volume of inquiries and requests for bookings of the Cuckoo Comedies recently reported received by Mark M. Dintenfass has been largely increased following the announcement of the acquisition of the featurettes by United Picture Theatres, Inc., according to a statement from United's contract department this week.

Commenting on the gratifying activity on the part of exhibitors anxious to give the Cuckoo Comedies early presentation, Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of United, said in part: "There is no question that, given quality of product there exists a lively demand for short subjects everywhere among exhibitors, who reflect in turn the taste of their clientele and patrons."

Archainbaud to Produce For Capellani

George Archainbaud, whose ability to produce pictures of box office value has been proved beyond question, has just signed a long-term contract with the Albert Capellani Productions, which releases its popular features through Pathe.

Mr. Archainbaud, a stepson of Emile Chautard, the noted French director, under whom he received his early training, will produce a series of comedy-dramas for the Capellani organization, starring June Caprice. His first offering will be "Little Mother Hubbard" adapted from "Liza Ann," Oliver D. Bailey's stage success.

Excellent Cast for Rolfe Feature

Production on "Red Virgin" Begun at Fischer Studio — Stories by Two Famous Authors

IN addition to Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, E. J. Ratcliffe and John L. Shine, whose names were announced last week, the cast of "The Red Virgin," the picturization of Charles A. Logue's original story, which B. A. Rolfe will present through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., will include Diana Allen, Eugene Strong, Gordon H. Standing and James S. Ryan.

A comparative newcomer to the screen, Miss Allen is one of the most attractive of the latest entrants for film honors. In "The Red Virgin" she is enacting the leading feminine role.

Eugene Strong, who is playing the juvenile lead, has seen service in most of the branches of the higher form of drama, his career covering six years in stock, two years in vaudeville, one season on the legitimate stage and a year and a half in pictures.

Gordon H. Standing's engagement for "The Red Virgin," marks that actor's second appearance on the screen since his return after twenty-one months' service in the army.

James S. Ryan, the fourth addition to the cast, is returning to the screen after a three years' absence, his last appearance having been made in the Metro serial, "The Great Secret," with Bushman and Bayne.

Production of "The Red Virgin" has just been started at the Fischer studio in New Rochelle. The picture is to be the first of a series from original stories by Charles A. Logue, whose works will be alternated in the Rolfe producing schedule with the Robert W. Chambers series of stories.

Goldwyn Plans New Laboratory

Plant to be Located in East, Opening Simultaneously with Eastern Studio — Experimental Work Planned

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that it has plans under way for the creation of an experimental laboratory in the form and technic of the motion picture. The laboratory will be situated in New York and will begin operation as soon as the Eastern studios, which are being planned, are completed.

The Goldwyn Company believes that the present form which the motion picture has reached does by no means use up all the possibilities of motion photography, and the experimental laboratory will aim directly to discover all the capacities and limitations of this kind of art. Samuel Goldwyn, who has been harboring this idea for some time, believes that the field of the motion picture can derive great benefit from experiment, just as the commercial theatre has been benefited by the experiments made in the art theatre.

While the results obtained in the laboratory will be, of course, reflected in the picture plays which the Goldwyn Company produces, no limitation will be set upon the work of the men and women associated in this new venture.

The Goldwyn Company among motion picture producers has been noted for the fact that it has allied with it on many occasions men who have devoted their efforts to the technical side of the theatre. Eugene Walter has recently gone to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City with no definite object except to view the work that is being done there and form his own conception of ways of bettering the modern photoplay drama.

Definite plans for the experimental laboratory have been entirely worked out. Announcement of the personnel is expected to be made shortly.

Special Universal Attraction Announced

Universal announces the completion of one of its most interesting special attractions for the Fall season. It is "The Trembling Hour," a mystery story of modern atmosphere.

Two stars are featured in this production and both achieve a personal triumph in the excellent manner in which they portray their roles.

The Fourth Degree, a step beyond the notorious Third Degree of the police, is demonstrated in "The Trembling Hour," the Universal photodrama starring Kenneth Harlan.

A cast of well-known leading players are included in the list of supporting players. They are Henry Barrows, seen in a dual role, Willis Marks, Edna Shipman, Gertrude Astor, Anna May Walthall and Carl Stockdale.

Mayer to Have Perfect Studio

Erection on Estate of Selig Will Soon Commence on Big Site in Los Angeles

UNDER special arrangements with Colonel William N. Selig, Louis B. Mayer is constructing an ultra-modern motion picture studio on the thirty-five acre Selig estate at Los Angeles. By this arrangement Mayer's new home for his First National releases secure the benefit of Colonel Selig's long years of construction experience, which date back to pioneer days of the movie game.

With the advent of Louis B. Mayer's forces the vast Selig estate has taken on a bustle of industrial activity. Valuable studio buildings, where many famous scenes have been filmed in the past, are coming down as fast as a huge crew can wreck them.

"What we are going to have," says William S. Sistrom, former general manager of Universal City and now producing manager of the Mayer interests, "is the most complete studio the motion picture world has ever seen. We will have a studio which will enable Mr. Mayer to adhere to the production of such Anita Stewart pictures as 'Virtuous Wives,' 'Kingdom of Dreams,' and 'In Old Kentucky.'

"We are making a departure from the old cramped plants, unworthy of the name of the studio. The Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin productions will be filmed in a studio that would ordinarily house fifteen or twenty companies. No equipment that the best brains of the movie world can conceive will be overlooked."

Stages and administration buildings will cover 200,000 feet of floor space and instead of just dressing rooms Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, the First National stars, will have complete bungalows for dressing purposes. Two covered stages 206 by 80 feet and 185 by 80 feet are under construction. The open stage will measure 200 by 110 feet. Two large swimming pools will also be a part of the equipment.

The entire group of administration building will be of Colonial architecture. These structures will house the executive, publicity, auditing, art, still picture and electrical departments.

After a conference in the East with Louis B. Mayer, Bennie Zeidman has returned to Los Angeles with the information that production will not be delayed because of studio construction work at Selig Zoo. While the $200,000 buildings are going up, temporary leases are being secured on other studios where Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin Productions will be filmed.

Goldwyn Plan to Aid Education

Compiles Records to Aid Exhibitors in Advertising Motion Pictures

WITH the opening of the new season in schools, colleges and other educational institutions, also with the outlining of programs for lecture courses and entertainments that supply instruction as well as amusement, there has come a surprising increase in the demand on the exhibitor for pictures that are calculated either to supplement the programs as heretofore followed, or to replace them entirely, according to the letters received at the home office of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation with specific reference to the Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs.

Since Goldwyn added the Bray Pictographs to its list of leases, between two and three hundred letters have been received from educational institutions of all types, covering every part of the country, requesting specific information about the distribution of the Pictographs and how soon they would be shown in the motion picture theatres.

This unsolicited endorsement of the growing regard for motion pictures of the nature being produced by the Bray Studios, is taken as a certain indication that the short subject of a truly worth while character is coming into its own, and the Goldwyn organization through its exchange forces, salesmen and press and service representatives making every effort to turn to the box offices of theatres this great new audience that is steadily developing.

A record is kept of every inquiry received concerning films of an instructive nature. Duplicates of these records are forwarded to the exchange in the proper territory with instructions to keep them on file that they may be of value when an exhibitor in the district presents a Pictograph containing a subject likely to be of special interest to a particular element in the community. With this selected list of prospective patrons to guide him, the exhibitor, at a small expense, may make a direct advertising appeal which is certain to produce results.

The records being compiled by Goldwyn, make it possible to go direct to the element in the community that cares little for feature photoplays, but will pay the price of admission to see an intelligent pictorial treatment of some scientific, travel, or educational subject in which it happens to be especially interested. Each release is designed to cover in an unusual way some subject never before treated in motion pictures; then for a comedy windup there is one of Bray's unique animated cartoons.

Albert Bassett Joins Art Film Studios

Albert A. Bassett, son of the late Russell Bassett who was with Famous Players, has joined the Art film studios of Cleveland, in the capacity of director.

New Concern to Offer Dramatic Subjects

With a capital stock of $100,000 fully subscribed, the Oakley Super-Quality Productions, Inc., will being shortly on its initial dramatic production in the Norbig Studios, at Edendale, California. James W. Early, one of the pioneers in motion pictures, who was with Pathe and Edison in the early nineties, is vice-president and managing director of the new firm. Mr. Early will personally supervise all production. Billy Oakley is president, while Walter K. Perkins, widely known as a former Ince-Triangle character star, is secretary.

According to Mr. Early, the first story to be filmed will be a six-reel drama, "The Valley of the Shadow," by Frederick Bennett. The new concern will also produce two-reel satires. All of its products will be marketed on the state-rights basis said Mr. Early.

Yvonne Gardell, who recently concluded an important engagement with the Paramount-Artcraft, has the stellar role in "The Valley of the Shadow." Miss Gardell will be supported by Frank Wilson, Florence Gray and Frank Perkins.

Play Only Incidental to Equity Star

Clara Kimball Young, following the release next month, of "Eyes of Youth," is to become the first motion picture star, in the sense that the public has come to recognize stars, in that, following her next picture, Miss Young will be exploited, advertised and offered to the public by means of her name only. The name of the play or story in which she is appearing will be mentioned merely for purposes of identification.

On all advertising and the various means of display used at theatres Miss Young's name will appear, while the name of the vehicle will be given in very small type so that folks can avoid repetition.

This is being done by the Equity Pictures Corporation because the rentals secured on the "Eyes of Youth" have proven the value of Miss Young's name.

Realart Sales Staff is Increased

As a result of the increasing activity in the motion picture market, the sales staff of the New York branch of Realart Pictures Corporation has been augmented. As a result, Lester W. Adler, manager of the branch, announces the territory covered by the exchange has necessarily been reapportioned.

J. B. Zimmerman recently of Metro's New York sales organization, is the latest addition to Mr. Adler's staff. He will cover the southern section of Brooklyn. The territory in which Mr. Zimmerman is now operating was formerly handled by Aaron Sacks, who also visited exhibitors on Long Island. As now arranged, Mr. Sacks will cover, in addition to all Long Island, New York State as far north as Albany and Troy.

Confirmation of Deal for Chambers' Stories

The following statement emanates from Isaac Wolper's offices:

"Since Isaac Wolper announced that he had secured the motion picture rights to Robert W. Chambers' literary work various motion picture persons and concerns have indirectly indicated that they too have contracted for all of the great novelist's books. Mr. Chambers wishing to lay the matter at rest made the following statement:

"'Because I am in thorough accord with Mr. Isaac Wolper's production policy, we have signed an agreement securing to him the exclusive Motion Picture Rights to all of my books and short stories which have heretofore not been done in Pictures. His idea of sparing neither time nor money and of eliminating the "Star" Motion Picture coincides entirely with my views, for I feel that the building up of a leading character in a story, and the necessary cutting down of other characters to gratify the "Star" results on the screen in a distorted and garbled version of a story which, in its published form, has, perhaps, met with the approval of the public.

"'Mr. Wolper and I realize that the first important step in the production of Super Features is the selection of the Director.

"'The stories available under this contract number forty-four and include my most recent novel—"The Slayer of Souls"—which is now running serially in Hearst's Magazine, and, all of my future writings. Before Mr. Wolper and I took up negotiations, a few of my stories had been disposed of here and there; but, practically all of my works, best adapted for big pictures are now in his hands for production.'"

Sol Lesser Purchases Spectacular Film

Sol Lesser announces the purchase of the domestic and Canadian rights for "The Sky-Eye," the thrilling aero special produced by William Steiner. Mr. Lesser closed negotiations for this picture before his departure for the Coast last week, and is planning to release it immediately with extensive exploitation as a special attraction.

Mr. Lesser plans to sell state-rights on this picture for every territory except that which he and his associates control personally. Greater New York territory is to be booked from the Sol Lesser Exchange at present located in the Longacre Building.

"The Sky-Eye" is a romantic drama of the Texas oil fields and its folk, linked together with the adventure of aircraft. The aerial views are said to be the most spectacular ever photographed. The cast includes Harry C. Meyers, June Keith, Thelma Kenly, Russell C. Hunt, who plays the part of "Sky-Eye," he of the "eagle aero eye," Lieut. C. C. Nutt, and Lieut. Harold G. Peterson, who was captured and held for ransom by Mexican bandits recently.

Central American Film Mart

Universal Man Tells of Conditions in That Country—Serials are Looked upon with Favor

AFTER a six month's stay in Panama as manager of Universal's foreign exchange there, Monroe Isen, exchange-manager returned to New York this week to get more films. That in a nutshell is the cause of his return. And from that the conclusion is evident that Isen is putting over Universal products in Central America.

Isen was formerly a salesman in the New York exchange and since having taken charge of the Colon office he has increased the volume of Central America business for Universal more than one-hundred percent.

According to Mr. Isen when he first took charge there American films were not overly popular. Mr. Isen obtained a number of Universal's best attractions, including serials and features and now the demand for Universal products is unlimited. In fact Mr. Isen has contracted with five separate exhibitors on the Isthmus for the exclusive showing of Universal pictures. The Colon office has for its territory all of Central America and the northern republics in South America. Within the last six months a total of nine new agencies have been established in South America and Central America. In South America the agencies are located in Colombia, Venezeula, Ecuador, and Trinidad. The Central American agencies are in the following Costa Rico towns: San Jose, Nicaragua, Guatemala, and Salvador. One of the new agencies is in Jamaica.

Serials, according to Mr. Isen, are the most fascinating subjects for the populace of South and Central America. Eddie Polo, Universal serial star is the most popular screen star in that vicinity, Mr. Isen said. Serials are shown in an unusual manner there, three episodes being shown in one evening and the serial is finished within a week. Many times the serials are repeated in a similar manner the week following Mr. Isen said. The same treatment is also given to five and six reel features quite often.

So great has become the demand for Universal pictures in this territory that Mr. Isen decided to make a trip to the Universal home-office and arrange for the shipping of many of the newer productions and more of the ones he now has. He will take back with him the latter part of the week two prints on "The Heart of Humanity" which is to be given an indefinite run at the El Dorado theatre, Panama City beginning the first week in November.

Prices in the Central American theatres range from ten to fifty cents for program attractions and when eight and ten reel features are shown the prices range up to seventy-five cents. According to Mr. Isen the production "The Heart of Humanity" will be shown at a record price of more than one dollar.

Raver Is to Revive "Cabiria"

First Time Shown in Three Years; Wide Exploitation Decided Upon as Aid to the Production

IN 1913, Harry Raver introduced to America Gabriele d'Annunzio's famous story in picture form; "Cabiria," where it was first given a private invitation-showing in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor and then regularly introduced to the public at the Knickerbocker Theatre on Broadway where it played to capacity audiences for more than six months. Mr. Raver established a standard scale of admissions at fifty cents to $2, in spite of his friends and advisors who claimed the public would not pay more than his minimum, fifty cents, to see any picture. Companies were immediately organized and long runs were recorded in all the principal cities of America.

Ten of these companies each carried an orchestra of thirty-four men, three operators, a manager, a singing chorus of twenty, a chorus master, musical director and advance agent. The weekly pay-roll of these ten companies aggregated 22,210. Smaller companies toured the intermediate cities and during the second year Cabiria was shown in better class Picture theatres of large capacity and was withdrawn from circulation a few months later and all prints destroyed. Three years have elapsed and the famous Italian poet and warrior's masterpiece is now being revised and abbreviated for an elaborate revival.

Originally, Cabiria was presented in 12,000 feet, and was too long for the majority of picture theatres. The revised edition will be issued in seven reels of slightly less than 1,000 feet each.

His claim that Cabiria, presented as it was with the assistance of Mark Leuscher, now manager of the New York Hippodrome, J. J. McCarthy, who later became manager for D. W. Griffith, Fred McClellan, former manager of Luna Park, and other experienced showmen who made up Raver's managerial staff, aided to sound the death-knell of the "Nickelodeon" and made possible the Bigger and Better picture of to-day.

Pioneers Go Strongly on Loew Circuit

The two latest Pioneer releases, "The Long Arm of Mannister," with Henry B. Walthall, and "The Girl from Nowhere," with Cleo Maidson, have been booked on the Marcus Loew Circuit in the New York territory.

Reports from the various house managers indicate that "The Girl From Nowhere" is going over big.

"Checkers" National Winner

Fox Melodrama Going Big in All Sections — Many Chicago Theatres are Playing the Picture

FOURTEEN days of continuous success at the Red Theatre, Seattle, Washington, found the motion picture public of that city anxious for more of the William Fox special, and it is likely that Manager John Hanvick will book a return engagement on this record-breaking production. The Wenatchee Theatre, under the management of W. W. Kastner, reports three days of filled houses for this feature in Wenatchee, Washington. Similar success was scored in Comas, Washington, where a three day run found the people congratulating Manager T. S. Woolson on the great success of "Checkers."

The Strand Theatre in Tampa, Florida, under the management of C. D. Cooley reports record breaking business with "Checkers." It ran there for one week. J. M. Root reports that the week's run of this splendid feature was the most successful his house, the Strand in Pasadena, California, ever had. The Daisy, Memphis, Tennessee, had four days of standing room only with this attraction.

Black & Anderson, owners of the Royal Theatre in Enid, Oklahoma, packed them in for four days with "Checkers." No less successful was A. H. Magee, of Arlington, N. J., whose Playhouse is one of the most popular theatres in the suburbs of New York.

Manager Cooper of the Twentieth Century Theatres in Chicago ran "Checkers" to filled houses for a week after the production had had a successful run at other Chicago theatres. Four days of unprecedented attendance at the Hippodrome in Allentown, Pennsylvania, led Manager Bennethum of that theatre to pronounce "Checkers" the superlative attraction of the year. Harry Clark of the Best Theatre, Topeka, Kansas, reported three days of unusually crowded houses. J. Johnson, manager of the Casino in Yuma, Arizona, had the most successful four days in the history of his theatre when "Checkers" was shown there.

Alice Brady On A Stage Tour

"Forever After" Stage Success is Being Shown to Eastern Cities — Tour Will Close in Chicago

ALICE Brady, Realart Pictures' star, who is now on tour playing the principal role in "Forever After." New York's stage success of last season, opened her 1919-20 theatrical season last week at the Lyceum Theatre, Paterson, N. J., Trenton and Atlantic City, N. J., also saw "Forever After" during the past week.

A number of Paterson exhibitors saw the performance of "Forever After" and participated in the demonstration given Miss Brady. Moe Kerman, Realart representative for the district, witnessing the Alice Brady reception said: "Who says that the screen does not help pack the dramatic theatre? They have another guess coming."

Realart is linking up Miss Brady's Road tour with her motion picture work and capitalizing local appearances for the benefit of exhibitors in the cities the star visits. Her itinerary includes Newark, New York City, Brooklyn, nine weeks in Boston, six weeks in Philadelphia, and one week each in Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit. She will end the season in Chicago.

Motion pictures will be made, according to present plans, in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago. For this purpose, besides her road company, Miss Brady will be accompanied by her motion picture director and company and a staff of assistant directors, camera men and electricians. Realart announces that there will be special publicity work carried on in all of the cities where pictures, or parts of pictures, are filmed.

Location Hunting Has Become a Fine Art

The finding of suitable locations for the making of motion pictures has been raised to a fine art at Universal City. No matter what demand may be made upon the location bureau of the production office, the place desired is catalogued.

Every location on the west coast, in Arizona, Mexico and the Rocky Mountain states is known to the Universal representative at that point. By return wire comes a statement as to the climatic conditions, whether or not any changes have been made in the location, whether or not it is accessible, and full information regarding transportation and the cost of using such a location.

Cody's Name in Lights a Drawing Card

Evidences of the spreading popularity of Lew Cody, which vogue is being capitalized by Louis J. Gasnier in his production of features with that player cast as a male vampire, were seen recently in Los Angeles where pictures in which the star was not originally intended for the leading role, were billed at local houses with Lew Cody's name conspicuous. Among these was Herman Bosley, part owner and manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Los Angeles, who was one of the first to recognize the opportunity offered by Cody's campaign of exploitation. When Manager Bosley advertised "Men, Women and Money," in which Ethel Clayton was starred, he and his publicity director, Roy Miller, proved their good showmanship when they coupled Cody's name with Miss Clayton's. As a direct result, it is said, the Alhambra drew larger crowds than it had in months.

Aviatrix to Deliver Pictures For Fox

Fox News announces a novel "scoop." Herbert E. Hancock, director in charge, has signed Louise Lowell, the only "cameramaid" in the world for Fox News. He has given this bright young aviatrix a roving assignment, and she will use a Spad formerly the property of Rolland Garros, French ace, to cover her stories in the quickest possible time and to deliver her pictures to the laboratory long in advance of the time an average cameraman would require.

Louise Lowell was a warm friend of Rolland Garros, the noted French ace, and now is driving a Spad that he used. This machine is capable of making 130 miles an hour, and it is the one which Miss Lowell will use to get the scenes of her Fox News assignments.

Miss Lowell is seeking new fields to conquer. She has promised Director Hancock that, being in a class by herself, she will beat all cameramen in the taking of pictures and in their delivery to the nearest laboratory.

Hodkinson Has Special Insert on "Bandbox"

The Hodkinson art department has completed an elaborate, specially designed insert on "The Bandbox," the Deitrich-Beck, Inc., production of Louis Joseph Vance's gripping mystery story starring Doris Kenyon. The inserts, equalling in appearance and forcefulness those recently sent to all American first-run theatres on "Desert Gold," is part of a publisher advertising campaign instituted by the Hodkinson organization and the producers of "The Bandbox."

The inserts, along with press sheets just completed on the Doris Kenyon picture, have gone forward to the thirty-one Hodkinson branches to be distributed among the nation's biggest exhibitors at trade showings of "The Bandbox" to be given shortly by all Hodkinson managers.

Extra Editions of Pioneer Press Books

As an evidence of the fact that the exhibitor really needs press books which are complete both in subject matter and suggestions, the Pioneer announces that it has been forced to issue as many as three additional editions of the press books on some of its releases.

While the initial editions run up into thousands in several cases, the entire run had been disposed of within a few days after leaving the press.

The twenty-four page publication on "The Boomerang" is now in its fourth edition, while "The Sins of the Children," "The Long Arm of Mannister," "The Girl from Nowhere" and "Virtuous Sinners" have all gone through two editions and orders have been given for still another edition.

"Lost Battalion" Wins Public Favor

"History is going to repeat itself," states W. H. Productions Co. "Just a year ago last week, on September 26th, began the greatest battle that American forces have ever engaged in, the war-deciding battle of the Meuse-Argonne.

"And now the veterans are living over again the thrilling scenes of last fall. They have lived them over again in the motion picture production, 'The Lost Battalion,' so that posterity may ever have a living, human record of one of the greatest episodes in the greatest war of the ages.

"The success with which this production is meeting is best evidenced by the rapidity with which the exchangemen are bidding on the picture. In those territories where the picture has been shown it has been acclaimed so enthusiastically that there is no room for doubt as to its box office possibilities."

Advantage is Taken of Star's Stage Tour

Co-incident with Constance Binney's starting this week for a tour in her stage success, "39 East," comes the announcement from Realart Pictures Corporation of plans it has under way for exploiting Miss Binney as a screen star. The exploitation plan is to be linked up with the local appearances of the actress in her stage production. Co-operative activities will include newspapers and magazines.

Publicity material will precede and follow the star on her entire trip.

Helen Holmes Proving Her Drawing Power

Bookings on the Helen Holmes serial, "The Fatal Fortune," are continuing to come in heavy, according to the report by the Elk Photoplays, Inc., who are handling this serial in Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Hall To Make Second Serial

So Pleased Over Episodes that he Plans Another Production. "Behind the Mask" Released This Week

FIVE episodes of Hallmark Pictures Corporation's serial, "The Tail of the Octopus," starring Ben Wilson, have been released—"The Devil's Trademark," "The Purple Dagger," "Face To Face," "The Hand of Wang," and "The Eye of Satan." The sixth episode, "Behind The Mask" will reach the Hallmark exchanges this week.

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, whose first venture in serial production is represented in the release of "The Trial of the Octopus," states that according to reports from Hallmark exchange managers in the principal exchange centres of the country, the Ben Wilson serial is hitting the high-water mark of successful booking. With few exceptions the exhibitors throughout the country who have booked this serial have, voluntarily, written to the home office of Hallmark praising drawing power of the serial and demanding more of the same actionable brand of serial drama.

The success of his first venture in serial production has proved so marked that Mr. Hall has closed negotiations for another serial to follow "The Trial of the Octopus" which is said to equal in every respect those qualities of the Wilson serial that have proved business getters for his clientele. The second Hallmark serial, the title of which will be announced next week, will follow the last release date of the Wilson serial.

"Her Game" Soon to be Issued

Story is by John K. Holbrook With Frank H. Crane Directing—Florence Reed to Appear in United Features

OCTOBER nineteenth is announced as the release date of "Her Game," the latest feature picture in which Florence Reed is to star for United Pictures Theatres, Inc. The story by John K. Holbrook is picturized in five reels, directed by Frank H. Crane and produced by Tribune Productions, Inc. Conway Tearle has the leading male role in a supporting cast which includes prominently Jed Prouty, Florence Billings and Mathilde Brundage. The scenes are laid first in the South and later in New York City and its environs.

Still another Florence Reed feature offering will soon be completed and will follow the present release, for "The Eternal Mother," which is extolled as a pronouncedly progressive step in magnitude and massiveness of production, is finished so far as the filming of both the exterior and interior scenes is concerned and is now in the hands of the laboratory experts.

On the early completion of the Bimberg studios, New York, the reconstruction of which is announced to be finished this month, Miss Reed will commence the fifth of her United series, it is stated. Meanwhile this emotional star is adding to her fame, and incidentally to her value to the exhibitor as a drawing name at the box office by the success she is reputed to be scoring in her legitimate stage production, which she is resuming for the brief interval between pictures.

A current Universal release is "Common Property." Robert Anderson is starred

Large Production for Franklyn Farnum

Jack Weinberg, President of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, has just returned from Los Angeles, where he has been in consulation with Wm. N. Selig, who will supervise the producing of a mammoth production, featuring Franklyn Farnum.

The Canyon Pictures Corporation have instructed Col. Selig to spare no expense in the making of a serial as it is their intention to create a masterpiece serial of exceptional merit. Special sets are already being built and new devices are being installed at Selig's Studios to be used for the serial.

First of Sid Smith Series Ready

The first of a series of 20 one-reel comedies featuring Sid Smith, the soldier comedian, which Alkire is filming for distribution through Bulls-Eye, has been completed. The selling title has not yet been announced. The Smith comedies will be "polite" and will not contain a single slap-stick feature, according to Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls-Eye. The Smith productions will be marketed as the "Holly Comedies." Robert P. Kerr, formerly with Keystone, Hank Mann and the L-Ko concerns is directing.

Madge Kennedy to Show in Two New Specials

Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star, who has been resting for the past three months at her country home near New York, returned to Goldwyn's Culver City Studios this week to appear in adaptations of two Saturday Evening Post stories, which she had a hand in selecting.

The Jerome K. Jerome story, "Strictly Confidential," contains an abundance of character comedy and reveals the Goldwyn comedienne at her best, whether she is interpreting the drab little English girl, whose spirit is squelched by kill-joy relatives, or the joyous young woman who has asserted her right to happiness.

Both of the Saturday Evening Post stories, it is understood, contain unusually congenial roles for Miss Kennedy, who will start work as soon as a continuity for the first production has been prepared and a cast selected.

Loew Houses Exploit "Birth of a Race"

"The Birth of a Race" has been bringing great results on the Loew circuit in Greater New York the past week. Mr. Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, says that in many instances this multiple reel feature has broken box office records and wherever it has been shown it has done really remarkable business.

For "The Birth of a Race," which is being heavily booked by Aywon, the Loew people put out some special advertising and handled it like the very unusual feature that it has been credited with being. It is seldom that the Loew people give a film special advertising, but in this case they felt the picture deserved it and the big business resulting upheld their judgment.

"Evangeline" a Big Hit in Union Hill, N. J.

Running simultaneously in three theatres in the town of Union Hill, N. J., the William Fox production of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's immortal poem, "Evangeline," scored the cinema sensation of the year. The picture was shown for three days at the Fulton, Franklin and Rialto theatres, and immediately following its closing at those theatres was shown at the Wilton and the Jewel in the same town. People came from all over the county of Hudson to see this production. It set a new record for the theatres, and was unanimously praised by the newspapers.

Realart Closes a Large Booking Contract

One of the biggest contracts for Realart Pictures received at the home office this week covers the chain of fifteen houses in Chicago owned and operated by Ascher Brothers, who are among the best known exhibitors in the Middle West. The agreement was closed by Nathan and Max Ascher through Harry W. Willard, Realart's Chicago manager.

"Checkers" in Song Follows Big Film

Not less successful than the William Fox production of "Checkers" is the "Checkers" song written by Edwards and Allen and published by McCarthy & Fisher, music publishers of New York. Inspired by and based on the famous Fox production, this song bids fair to establish a record for popularity as great as that of the film.

Six Greater New York theatres in a single week featured the song, including The Riviera, the Academy of Music and the Japanese Garden in New York; the Bayridge, the Bedford and the Jamaica in Brooklyn.

Following the unequalled display of "Checkers," the song, at a big Woolworth store in the theatre district of Fulton Street, Brooklyn, the Woolworth store at Herald Square, New York, in the heart of the theatre district, where William Fox's special feature film had run for 105 consecutive performances, gave a window and counter display to the popular song.

From all parts of the country comes information that the exhibitor is learning the value of the song as part of his campaign of publicity; and the film causes those who have not bought the song before they saw the production to buy it upon leaving the theatre, as a souvenir to remind them of the greatest race-track picture ever screened.

Lew Cody Production Ready for Release

"The Beloved Cheater," the first Lew Cody production, is now ready for release. This is the first of a series of productions planned for the star by his manager, L. J. Gasnier.

The play in six reels is described as a society satire with a good deal of "sex paprika" dashed in for distinctiveness and interspersed with a humor that is light and human in vein.

The nation-wide exploitation of the Lew Cody production is receiving great impetus, and, in view of Cody's present popularity and following the advertising campaign, promises to realize a complete victory and indeed already shows tangible evidences of eventually scoring a success.

Royalty See "Miracle Man" on Voyage

His Majesty, Albert, King of the Belgians, Queen Elizabeth and Crown Prince Leopold saw George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" one evening on their way across the Atlantic. Evidently the picture made as big a hit with the royal family for the following wireless message was received from King Albert's secretary by Walter E. Greene, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation:

"'Miracle Man' seen and much appreciated."

When the George Washington was in port here the last time Mr. Greene had the print of "The Miracle Man" placed on board to be used on the return voyage.

Smithsonian Group Reports All Is Well

A cablegram and letter received almost simultaneously from Cape Town, Africa, by the New York office of the Universal states that the progress of the Smithsonian Institute African Expedition in conjunction with the Universal company is becoming more interesting daily and that all in the party are well.

When the party first arrived, according to the messages, some little trouble was had in obtaining the confidence of the people who are to make the trip through Africa with the American explorers. After they presented the proper credentials, etc., they were given a warm reception and according to William Stowell, directing the motion picture part of the expedition, everyone in the vicinity has agreed to give them all the assistance possible.

The first thing scheduled for the exploring party is what is termed the greatest elephant hunt ever held in Africa.

An Action to Restrict Star's Temperament

Louis Burston, president of the Burston Films, Inc., has filed suit against Miss Darmond in the Superior Court of Los Angeles asking damages in the sum of $31,200. The producer's claim for redress lies in his allegation that her continued tardiness and her total failure to appear when her services were needed at various times and places during the production of a serial, known as "The Hawk's Trail," resulted in a loss of time for the entire company; of a non-productive overhead expense during such absences from her contractual duties, etc.

The suit, it is said, establishes a precedent among breach of contract actions in the courts of this country. It is certain that the proceedings will engage the serious attention of every producer in the United States.

Durning Contracts with C. R. Macauley Photos

The C. R. Macauley Photoplays, Inc., who produced "When Bearcat Went Dry," which World Pictures is distributing, have signed contracts with Bernard Durning for a term of years to star in future productions made by this company. Mr. Durning by his clever acting in "Bearcat" of the role of the hero has received so many compliments for his work from picture patrons and exhibitors that the Macauley Company felt that it was no more than his due to be accorded the recognition he deserved by making him a star.

First Release of Enlarged Pathe Review

The first edition of the Pathe Review under the broadened plans of this most attractive short subject, will be released on October 26th. A series of highly entertaining and educational subjects are contained in the Pathe Review, among which is the Novagraph pictures of Ada Forman, celebrated American dansеuse.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

BY THE

UNIVERSAL

TO THE TRADE

On account of the unsettled printing conditions and the ensuing difficulties, we have been forced to leave out our regular four page colored insert that you have seen regularly every week on our Universal Special Attractions. The insert that should have appeared in this issue of the Motion Picture News was completed and printed and carried a wonderful advertising message on one of the most lavish outdoor productions the cinema industry has seen in many years —

FRANK MAYO IN "THE BRUTE BREAKER"

Here is a story staged amid the most wondrous backgrounds and scenic effects that the art of the motion picture has yet discovered in this country, of which the New York Telegraph said — "This picture should satisfy in its scenic beauty alone." In no production to date has the virile Mr. Mayo reached such heights of dramatic intensity as you will see in "THE BRUTE BREAKER," a brillant dramatic gem in an even more brilliant setting. We urge you to review this production, now being exhibited to the trade at all Universal Exchanges.

Husbands

By Stroheim

NOTE—In the presentation of this extraordinary production I am convinced that we have reached the very pinnacle of perfection. Stroheim is the genius who conceived the story, wrote the play, directed the entire production and played the leading role in what I believe to be the most enthralling picture of modern times, vastly superior to the majority of so-called big pictures. I do not attempt to describe it. It is beyond the powers of any one man to present its hugeness in mere words; therefore I am now completing plans for all Universal Exchanges for private exhibitions to which every exhibitor in America will be invited.

CHICAGO says

"Here is proof positive that Dorothy Phillips is a great actress—and that Allen Holubar is a great director. This picture is going to be very popular—it is first of all a romantic drama. If you enjoy good pictures you can't afford to miss this."—EVENING POST.

"Dorothy Phillips in the dual role of both aaughters is superb. The picture is forceful and appealing and it will prosper."—HERALD and EXAMINER.

"The audience liked the picture. That, after all, is the criterion. People were saying, 'Isn't that wonderful.' No one can see it and fail to be impressed."—DAILY JOURNAL.

BOSTON says

"It is the duty of every person in Boston to see 'The Right to Happiness.' It deserves to rank among the masterpieces of the screen world. It has yet to be equalled."—EVENING RECORD.

"A powerful picture of today's conditions—a striking portrayal."—HERALD.

"One of the most human film plays of the season."—AMERICAN.

"Artistic and convincing."—TRANSCRIPT.

"A dramatic love story. It is hard to believe it is the same actress in both characters."—POST.

PITTSBURGH says

"This film should go big. The plot is extraordinarily well done and the detail of the story is well worked out. It is a splendid vehicle for Dorothy Phillips and she is supported by a capable company."—POST.

"An instructive as well as intensely dramatic picture. Beautiful scenes and dramatic pictures of the war of revolution. Miss Phillips plays her dual role with great skill."—GAZETTE.

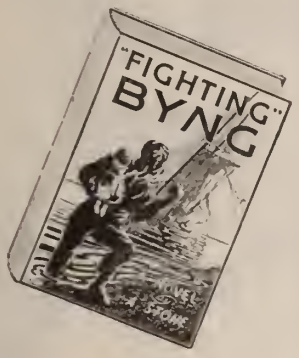
The Fiction Mart

"The Curse of Capistrano"
By Johnston McCulley

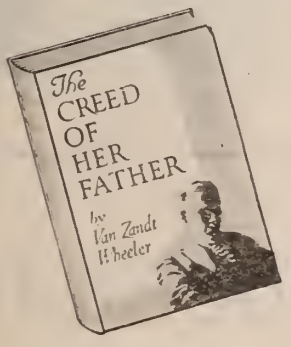
Character of Story: Adventure.
Theme: Unrest of tropics.
Characters: Senor Zorro, a daring outlaw, always masked; Don Diego Vega, a wealthy young man, supposedly fond of peace and the arts, in reality the same person; Don Carlos Pulido, a man of good family but at odds with the government; Dona Catalina, his wife; Senorita Lolita, his daughter; Sergeant Pedro Gonzales; Captain Ramon, Commander of the troopers; The Governor; Fray Felipe; Don Alejandro, Diego's father.
The Plot: Senor Zorro, the Curse of Capistrano, has been terrorizing El Camino Real, the road that connects the missions of Old California, but robs only the oppressors of the natives. Captain Ramon, whose suit is rejected by Senorita Lolita, accuses Don Carlos of harboring Zorro, and the governor imprisons him with his wife and daughter. Zorro calls for the young men who secretly approve his deeds, to come to his aid, and they rescue the Pulidos, after which Zorro takes Lolita to Fray Felipe's as a safe hiding place. Lolita has been in love with him for some time, having also refused to marry Don Diego. Zorro kills Ramon in a duel and tries in vain to convince the governor of Carlos' innocence. Just as the governor's men are about to capture Zorro and Lolita, Zorro's followers announce that they will no longer tolerate the governor's injustice and demand pardon for Carlos and Zorro. The governor is forced to agree and Zorro throws off his mask, disclosing the fact that he is also Don Diego, who had long ago determined to play this game in order to help those whom he believed unjustly persecuted.
Locale: Southern California — merely exteriors.
Picture Highlights: Plenty of action and a dual rôle. A good story for a picture of Western life and adventure.

"The Hidden Valley"
By Muriel Hine

Character of Story: Emotional.
Theme: A Woman's Search for Happiness in Love and Marriage.
Characters: Sheila Travers, charming English girl, reared in comfort and refinement; her mother, her father; Lance, girlhood sweetheart whom she rejects; Sir Hilgate Hinkson, merchant; Sandy, whom she loves passionately, promises to marry and finally refuses; Pat Ryan, Sandy's poet friend; Cara, a married cousin, pleasure loving and worldly wise; Captain Tim Craik, afterward Cara's husband; Philip Antrobus, stern and ambitious, direct antithesis to Sandy, whom she marries for that reason; Crombie, a friend who also loves her; Val Logue, a successful artist with whom she finds happiness in a second marriage.
The Plot: Sheila loves sport and fair play, believes divorce absolutely wrong, and understands nothing of passion. She falls desperately in love with Sandy, but when she realizes, during a momentary loss of self control on his part, that love means more than she had ever imagined, she resolves, never to marry anyone. Three years later, she meets Antrobus, politically ambitious and, for that reason, supporting the suffrage movement in London. They marry with a distinct understanding that their life is to be a co-partnership, based on work together. But Sheila misses something, she does not know what, and, though outwardly happy and successful, is really lonely and restless. She visits Cara, who had shocked her family and friends by eloping with Craik, and finds her supremely happy with the man she really loves and her little boy. Sheila is anxious for a family, but Antrobus thinks that children would be a nuisance and require the expenditure of money that he would rather use to further his plans. Sheila accepts Crombie's friendship for want of other interest, but it ends in his declaration of love, and after learning something of his past from a friend who had known him before, she is again bitterly disappointed in men and convinced that happiness is an impossibility. Then she meets Val, who is really congenial, and after Antrobus' death, she marries him and finds contentment.
Locale: Rural England, London and Europe, during a trip abroad, which may be omitted.
Highlights: Strong emotional scenes, a vivid personality in the woman's character, and while there is not much suspense, there is plenty of interest.



"The Choice"
By Maurice Weyl



Character of Story: Problem.
Theme: What sort of married life is best suited to an ignorant little telephone girl with unusual beauty and instinctive good taste and absolutely no intelligence.
Characters: Asenath McBride, telephone operator; Susan Collins, her friend; James Rawlings, her first suitor; Mary Dunne, a friend of Susan's; Harold Larned, second suitor whom she marries; Wallace Graham, Harold's best friend; Louise Graham, his wife; Ansenath's father and mother; Harold's father and mother.
The Plot: Asenath's father is a strict church member who disapproves of almost every form of pleasure and particularly of young men whom he does not know. Susan Collins, a most worldlywise young woman who works in Asenath's office, initiates her into the joys of masculine friendship, so that when her father allows James Rawlings, also a church member, to call and take her out, she is greatly delighted. James proposes marriage and Asenath joyfully accepts, as he is considered a very good match, but during the engagement James discovers her mental limitations and asks to be released. Then Harold Larned, whom Asenath had met before and always liked, accepts a position with the company by which she is employed, and falls in love with her, although he, too, belongs to a better social class. They are married and live at first with Harold's parents, but Asenath realizes that her mother-in-law expects her to keep her rooms neat and clean, and as she is rather untidy, she persuades her husband to take a house of their own. Then they meet Wallace and Louise Graham and Asenath suffers in Harold's estimation by contrast with Louise, but after Louise tells him that she is not happily married and tries to persuade him to make love to her, he values Asenath more highly than ever.
Locale: Small town near New York and a few country scenes — mostly interiors.

BIG BOOKS

MAKE POPULAR PICTURES. F'RINSTANCE —

A WOMAN WHO DARED — By Dale Drummond — the story of a young wife handicapped by an overbearing husband.

"What would you do, Kathie, if you got married and found that you had made a mistake?"

"Well — I wouldn't sit around like a tame cat." And she didn't.

"FIGHTING" BYNG — by A. Stone — a plot of mystery — Secret Service; adventure; withal a charming love story. This author has the knack of the great detective who handles big cases for the government. The story not only traverses the triangle of domestic difficulties but delves into the snares of spies and triumphs of big business as well. It's big.

THE CREED OF HER FATHER — by Van Zandt Wheeler — a dramatic story of a woman's love and her father's creed. Love there is, mistaken and genuine — and, as the story unfolds in dramatic intensity, many a father will look into his soul and ask: "Have I been as just as Dr. Howard?"

THE YAZOO MYSTERY — by Irving Craddock — the story of a head-on collision between an adverse fate and a determined man — Love, excitement, adventure at express speed.

MAID AND WIFE — by Carolyn Beecher — a rapid plot which transplants itself in New York. There among the pitfalls the heroine solves her problem. She tried her wings but came back to the nest. More than five million people have read this story in serial form.

ONE WOMAN'S STORY — by Carolyn Beecher — how one woman strangled her happiness in the noose of jealousy. Millions have read this story in serial form.

Members of the William Duncan Company engaged in the production of his serial "Smashing Barriers" for the Vitagraph Company, believe that the title of the thriller should be changed to include "and everything else." From director to prop boy, hardly one has escaped various scratches and bruises suffered during the many escapades in the making of the serial.

Real tears were easily furnished by Helene Chadwick for her crying scenes in "The Cup of Fury," in which she is playing with the Goldwyn Company, recently, as the result of Miss Chadwick's too impetuous desire to reach the studio on time. As she was speeding to the Culver City plant in her car, she failed to escape a collision with a lumber truck which abruptly stopped her progress, and at the same time caused a bill for repairs of $500. Miss Chadwick's grief arose principally from the fact that her insurance for the car had expired the preceding day.

Because much of the material which Douglas Bronston has screened in his direction of Neal Hart in western pictures has been sacrificed by the necessity of keeping the pictures to their two-reel length, Studio Manager Harry Owens has decided that Bronston's forthcoming production will be released as a three-reel special. This, it is said, will be the first featurette of the Capitol Company which will exceed the two-reel standard previously set for their productions.

The living room in the home of Bessie Barriscale and her husband-director, Howard Hickman, these days resembles the information bureau of a Metropolitan railroad station, for it is liberally strewn with time tables, magazines and guides as well as other aids to travel. The noted actress and her husband, upon completion of their present contract, are arranging a tour around the world, in which Miss Barriscale declares she will visit in reality the many territories which heretofore she has been familiar with only through the medium of scenery during her screen work.

Ray Smallwood, who is to direct "The Best of Luck," the first Metro Drury Lane melodrama, is finding it difficult to find a Scotch landscape for an exterior. After spending days touring Southern California and puncturing tires on obscure roadways, Smallwood thought he had found an ideal spot a few miles north of Point Furman. There was only one drawback: against the horizon was silhouetted an array of palm trees. Smallwood is still searching.

Several companies of motion picture folk have found themselves stranded at various small Southern California points, as a result of the railroad tie-up. Among those who were returning from location when the strike occurred were Will Rogers' Goldwyn Company, who found themselves delayed at Barstow Junction. No trains were leaving and when night came all of the players rigged themselves with blankets and spent the night on the lawn in front of the station.

Madge Kennedy about to become the lady of the Manor in Goldwyn's "Strictly Confidential"

For the first time in more than a year of continuous activities, Monte B. Rice, publicity man at the National studio, is planning for a brief respite from his duties there, and is arranging for a short vacation. Rice declares that he has been so busy with handling all the press matter, both production news and general publicity, for seven production units, that he hasn't even had time to prepare for the heavy fog which is expected about October 1st.

Josie Sedgwick, who has been playing leads with the Universal for the past three years, has been engaged to play opposite Will Rogers in his next Goldwyn production. Miss Sedgwick just finished the lead opposite Fred Stone.

Jack Gilbert has just completed an eight weeks' engagement as a juvenile with George Loane Tucker, in a rôle which is said to be one of the most dramatic in which that player has ever appeared. Just preceding this was his work as the juvenile lead opposite Mary Pickford in "The Heart of the Hills."

May Allison is an honorary member of "The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Workers in the United States and Canada." This imposing title embraces many of the carpenters, electricians and other technical men employed at the studio and at present the Union has called a strike to obtain recognition from the film producers. As an honorary members, Miss Allison is wondering now whether she will have to be with "the Walkoffs," which is her latest picture.

A special engagement has been signed by the Universal Company with Lynn F. Reynolds for the direction of its forthcoming special Harry Carey feature to be known as "Overland Red," from a story by Harry H. Knibbs. It is said to be one of the most pretentious of the star's western vehicles, and Director Reynolds' engagement is the result of the necessity of obtaining some specially spectacular incidents for which he has established a reputation. Much of the picture is to be made in the Mojave desert, and in support of Harry Carey will be Vola Vale and Harold Goodwin.

Director Jack Ford has completed his version of "The Three Wise Men of the Desert," the Peter B. Kyne story which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. Harry Carey was Director Ford's featured player. The company spent three weeks on location at Victorville, California, where mountain and desert scenes were made.

Allan Forrest, who has just completed a special engagement with the Universal Company as the juvenile lead in "Cassidy of the Airlanes," the aerial feature produced by Director Jacques Jaccard, has been engaged by Maxwell Karger specially for the production of the Metro production, "The Walkoffs," in which May Allison is starred. Prior to his engagement with the Universal air picture, Forrest for three years was leading man with Mary Miles Minter at the American studio, Santa Barbara, and his work led to his engagement to play the leading male rôle in support of Miss Allison. The picture is one, it is said, in which he will have a very satisfactory part in it, under the direction of Herbert Blache, Forrest will be able to expand largely on the work of leading man in the stage version of the play.

Except for one little item Marie Walcamp, Universal star, succeeded in making her start for Japan, where she will play the principal rôle in "The Petal of Lao-Tze," without any last moment complication. After the special train on which the company went to Seattle to board ship for the Orient had started, a studio employee found Miss Walcamp had left her passport behind in her dressing room. By this time Miss Walcamp was wiring frantically for the very necessary document, and a messenger rushed northward in time to deliver the passport at the dock just as the liner was about to start.

Studio Notes

Pell Trenton, who has just completed a rôle in support of Blanche Sweet in "Cressy," has been engaged to play the leading rôle with Viola Dana in the Metro Japanese fantasy, "The Willow Tree," which is being produced for Screen Classics. Mr. Trenton recently appeared in support of May Allison in "The Uplifters" and "Fair and Warmer," and these engagements led to his prominence in the present cast. The leading man formerly was in several stage productions in New York City, among which were "Seven Days," "Pegg O' My Heart" and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." He left the latter production to enter the United States Service.

For three days and nights Henry Otto, who is directing Viola Dana in "The Willow Tree," a forthcoming Screen Classic feature, has been chasing sunsets. In company with his cameraman, John Arnold, Otto attempted to secure some scenes at Catalina Island showing the sun rising and setting, but each time weather conditions either were unfavorable or the cloud effects which were desired, were absent. Previews of the scene, at the studio, however, show them well worth Mr. Otto's efforts.

Two of the most pretentious of recent productions are being referred to by friends of Kathleen Kirkham in their enthusiastic endorsement of her ability. These pictures are "The Beloved Cheater," in which, with Eileen Percy and Mae Bush, she played opposite Lew Cody, and "The Gay Lord Quex," the Goldwyn production just completed with Tom Moore in the leading rôle.

Douglas Bronston, formerly a director of serials for Pathe and more recently staff writer with the Fox Company, has been engaged to direct Neal Hart in his new series of two-reel Westerns being made at the Capitol studio.

Among the busiest, as well as productive creators of original screen stories on the West Coast, is H. H. Van Loan, whose picture material is being produced at the same time at several studios. In addition to writing a story called "Conscience" for Madlaine Traverse, Fox star, Van Loan has been engaged by Myron Selznick for a story featuring Eugene O'Brien. Another story of this writer's will be produced by the Vitagraph Company in the near future, with Earle Williams in the leading rôle. It is to be entitled "Far East," and in it, it is said, Willams will portray an entirely different rôle than he has undertaken in the past.

Hector V. Sarno, who recently completed an engagement with Jessie D. Hampton, has been cast by Goldwyn for a strong character part in "The Silver Horde," the Rex Beach story which is being directed by Frank Lloyd. Sarno recently returned with the company from Bellingham, Washington, where many scenes were made of the great Salmon fishing industry that features in the story. Sarno's last Goldwyn performance was in "The Crimson Gardenia."

Plays in which the mental clash dominates rather than those of physical conflict are prophesied as a development of the near future by Clarence Badger, the Goldwyn director, whose recent productions with Madge Kennedy, Mabel Normand and Will Rogers have been highly successful ones. Badger points to the success of George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" as an example of screen stories in which action is secondary in importance to elevated mental and spiritual thought. "As we come to realize," said Mr. Badger, "that we do not have to keep the eye dancing with physical action reflected on the screen, what a wealth of material heretofore thought unavailable for pictures is before us!"

Paul Powell, the noted director, has been engaged to have charge of the production of Mary Pickford's first offering for the United Artists Corporation release that of "Pollyanna," which has been adapted from the stage success of the same name.

Here and There

William Russell, who recently closed a contract for his appearance as star in Fox features, wires to the West Coast the information that he has purchased screen rights to "The Lincoln Highwayman," which he will produce at the Fox Hollywood studios. He is expected to arrive there about the middle of October to begin the production which will be the third of his series for the William Fox Company, his first having been "Sacred Silence," and the one on which he is now working being called "Eastward Ho!"

Upon completion of her present duties as director of Lew Cody in his second starring vehicle, Ida May Park, one of the few successful woman producers in the industry, and Joseph de Grasse, her husband, also widely known as a director, will be engaged on a series of special productions which are to have the benefit of their joint creative ability. The couple have arranged with a prominent producer for a series of features which will typify their original ideas of screen dramatic construction.

Having completed her engagement in the big Thomas H. Ince feature production of "Americanism vs. Bolshevism," Claire DuBrey is entertaining her father and mother who recently arrived from the east, and declares she is having the time of her life initiating her parents into the mysteries of the great motion picture plants. Miss DuBrey is said to have given an unusually striking performance in the Ince picture.

One of the most important contracts in the directorial field has just been closed in the agreement by which Frank Borzage has been engaged as the first director for William Randolph Hearst, who is establishing a twenty million dollar company. Borzage's star is to be Marion Davies, and he has already left for New York City to prepare for his initial first feature. Borzage recently completed two independent productions with Fred Stone as the star.

Equipment Service

What Is An Inspector's Seal

CHARLES A CHRISTOPHER of Rochester, Pa., writes.

Received my membership card and your letter and was glad to hear from you and to know that I was admitted to your wonderful organization. I will do my best to make it a success.

Well, here goes my first letter to be published in the Moving Picture News, and you can publish my name if you care to.

I am working in a theatre in one of the finest booths in this section of the country.

I have two Powers 6 A's which have been made into 6 B's. Both were overhauled about two weeks ago and they run like watches.

My booth is equipped with a long work bench, a 17-inch exhaust fan which certainly eliminates all the heat.

The machines are set level with the screen and I get one of the clearest and steadiest pictures you ever looked at.

Am using A. C. current with White a. c. cored carbons, using two Sterling economizers.

I can operate all of the house lights from the booth and when I want anyone from the office I have a light which flashes downstairs.

In regard to film, I have lots to say but will save some for my next letter.

Last night I ran a six reeler called "Modern Love" by the Universal Company and it was the worst stuff I ever handled since I entered the "game."

I had to make 54 new patches and the sprocket holes were torn beyond repair. I had to stop the machines so often that I had to put an apology on the screen and on the last show at half past ten on the third reel every one went out and I closed the show.

Now this is my kick. Why don't they discard such old junk as this and not pass it out on the show men?

I think that it is time that something be done to eliminate this trouble.

A fellow steps into a booth fifteen minutes before the show starts and opens up the film case and takes out the reels and each one has an inspector's seal on it and when you look it over you find it like the samples I am sending you.

What is the idea of the inspector's seal?

Do they think projectionists are dead?

I can tell you the minute I open up a reel if it has been inspected.

This is all for this time. I will write on the subject again and write more fully concerning the conditions of film.

Can you send me some labels and a pin? If so, let me know and I will pay you whatever charges there are.

Don't you think it would be a good idea to have some slides made for the members to run on the screen like the operator's union? Am enclosing a sketch of a pretty fair slide that I think would be nice and let the members pay for them. They would not cost more than 50 cents apiece.

REPLY: Why not a photograph of your wonderful room? To read your letter one would assume that you were willing and anxious to put your room and its equipment up against the best in the country. Let us hope that is just the way you feel. To prove it, send in a photograph of your room together with a complete description of every device in it and we will print them.

You ask why junk films are sent out. It must be because the Exhibitor stands for it. Surely, if all the Exhibitors yelled for help, the Exchange would begin to "get wise." They are wise now but as long as their films get by with only a feeble kick here and there they are not worrying. What, for instance, did your manager say to you when you told him in what condition you found the films? Did he sit down and write a "regu'ar" letter to your Exchange, or did he say, "Oh, well, do the best you can and perhaps we'll get better film next time."

Further on you ask "What is the idea of the Inspector's seal?" Why, don't you know?

It's simple enough. Since Exchanges have stopped examining and repairing film, the poor Inspector has had nothing to do. Surely you don't think the Exchange would discharge him. The Professional Gentleman is entitled to a job for the rest of his life merely because of what he was supposed to have done in years gone by.

So what is he given to do?

Easy again. They give him a punch and let him play "Trolley Conductor." As each film comes in, he opens the can, puts the film on a rewinder, gets out his trusty punch and goes to it. The more punch holes per thousand feet, the better Inspector he proves himself to be.

Getting back to earth again—your suggested N. A. M. L. slide is very similar to the one now being made for members by Charles H. Dorr, 41 Sargent street, Winthrop, Mass. At last accounts, Mr. Dorr, who we believe is a doctor by profession but who dabbles in things photographic, was making and selling these slides for 50 cents each. All he requires is your name, plainly spelled, together with your membership number.

Your labels and pin have been sent.

Unsteady Picture

Roxy E. Palmer: I have a Simplex outfit, and am unable to keep my screen picture steady. My pad springs are tight. What shall I do?

ANSWER: Take hold of the fly wheel of your machine and turn until the intermittent movement is in the "locked" position. This position is gained at the point where it is possible to turn the fly wheel without having the intermittent sprocket move at the same time.

When the sprocket is "locked" see if there is any play in it. If there is the movement will have to be adjusted until the play entirely disappears.

Be sure also that the film guide lies tight against the intermittent sprocket. This latter fault is often the cause of unsteady pictures.

Mr. Palmer also asked for Simplex booklets. Write to the Precision Machine Company and ask for their descriptive matter. They will be glad to send it to you because by reading the booklets you will be enabled to handle your Simplex with greater ease, and at the same time learn of ways to keep your machine in perfect condition as well as to get the best results.

Why Power's Uses Fibre Bearings

From H. W. H., No. 589:

Will you tell me why the Nicholas Power Company uses fibre bearings on their speed control rather than oil cups or holes. Wouldn't the friction be reduced by such oil holes?

ANSWER: The form of bearing was changed some time ago with the idea of making the machine more "fool proof." Oil cups and holes were all right so long as the projectionist used judgment in filling them. But the careless man doused oil over and around the oil holes with the natural result that the lubricant got on the friction disks and played havoc with the speed control.

Engineers of the Nicholas Power Company, got busy and devised and oil-less bearing which consisted of a fibre bushing thoroughly saturated with a special lubricating compound. This is the bushing you refer to.

These frictionless bushings have proved very satisfactory and it is doubtful if there is any increase of friction over the metal bearings and oil cups. Surely the advantage gained by doing away with all chance of oil getting on the friction disks would more than make up for any slight increase in friction.

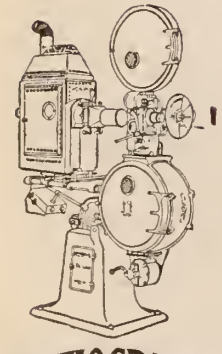
KINDLY ADDRESS YOUR REPLY TO

H. K. Barnett Theatre Supply Company,
Dallas, Texas.



Gentlemen:

Kindly quote this office by return of mail on two Motiograph DeLuxe complete for our Ruby Theatre, Breckenridge, Texas.

The old Motiograph machines we now own, three of them, are giving wonderful service, one of them having been in constant use since February of 1913 but our newest competitor in Breckenridge, we understand will install two DeLuxe purchased from you so there's nothing left for us but to do the same. We always try to go comeptition one better but in this instance the best we can do is to tie them by reason of the fact that in projection -- "there ain't no such animal" as "better" than Motiograph.

Awaiting your very early reply and with very best wishes, we beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

Exchangeman Kicks

JOHN T. writes as follows:

I received the labels a few days ago. Many thanks for same.

The reason I have not written to you is because a week after I "signed up" with the N. A. M. L. the place where I was working changed management and the new man had an operator of his own (his son), so that left me out.

I have not worked at the business since until a few days before I wrote you for the labels. I still had a few of the old ones, but I did not care to run out — Safety First.

But there is one thing I would like to ask you: When I joined the N. A. M. L. I was of the understanding that the labels were to be pasted on the inside of the cover of the film can, which I have been doing.

Now the World Film Co. writes me a letter:

> Your operator pasted one of his union labels over the label that we always have on the inside of the lid of our cases. This is fine stuff all right, but will you be kind enough to see that this is not done again?
> We paste this inside label there as a means of identification of our shipping cases.
> (Signed) S. E. READ.

Now, what do you suppose is wrong with this fellow. Has our department touched a sore spot on him or is my writing so poor that no one can read it? I admit pasting my N. A. M. L. label over the label on the lid of the box, but what difference should that make if he can't read my writing. Surely he can read the typewritten address on the outside of the can.

Well, as I am taking up too much of your time with something that does not amount to anything worth while speaking of, I will enclose a few pieces of film I took out of a five-reel Vitagraph feature that I ran yesterday. The company surely wanted everybody to know what reel the operator was running, as I had taken out twenty-three of them and left two of them in, as there were two reels that had no title, so I had to leave them in in order that the next fellow would have a way of telling what reel he had a hold of. And the best of it was the manager told me that the contract called for a new print.

REPLY: When the League was first started it was suggested that the labels be pasted on the outside of the film cans or on the inside of the cases. But as time went on and more and more labels came into use, it often happened that a case or a can was found carrying the label, but with films inside in wretched condition. It was evident that the container had been used for a number of times without removing the label. By this oversight, intentional or otherwise, it was made to appear that the films had just been examined by an N. A. M. L. member, which was not true.

The best way to get around this condition is to put the labels on the cans or cases in such a way that when they are opened the labels will be destroyed. With film cans, this is simple enough. Just paste the label on the edge, letting it lap over on top and bottom if necessary. But cases present more of a problem. Unless someone can think of a better place, it is suggested that the labels be pasted on the back of the case between the hinges. Even here the paper is apt to be torn, due to the rought handling of expressmen, but it is better for this to happen than to allow one label to ride about over the country on a film can containing film that never came into possession of a member of the N. A. M. L.

A Real Partnership

H. D. Shay, of the Reaper theatre, Monroe, Mich., says: I am enclosing herewith my blank for membership in the N. A. M. L.

I have been following it up ever since it was originated, but owing to my not being in the show business for a year, I did not apply for membership.

I have been running projectors for ten years now and I have been very much against punch mark in the films and it seems to be a very much used evil around Detroit and nearby towns.

I do not deem it necessary to resort to punch marks or razor blade marks to be used as a signal for the approach of the end of a reel. Man was given brains and if he uses them can carry the ends of his reels in his mind and not destroy other people's property. If he cannot remember then let him write them down.

Friend wife is as much against these methods as I and she is a first-class projectionist and has put six years in the study of projection. She reads everything on projection and in fact has her nose in Hawkins and other electrical books in preference to other kinds of reading.

She runs the machine in our other house every Saturday and Sunday and gets along fine.

REPLY: Which reminds us that a short time ago in a very large city, the city authorities were tipped off that a theatre manager was allowing a girl to operate his projectors. The inspector hitched up his belt, tipped his hat over one eye — like a "movie" detective, you know — and set out for the theatre where the underhand work was going on.

Reaching the theatre he slipped up the stairs to the projection room, listened an instant to make sure that the voice he heard was a female's and then — rushed the place.

The girl was humming away while she threaded her second machine and hardly gave him a glance as he catapaulted into the room.

"Ha, ha, my little lady!" he said, or words to that effect. "Now I've caught you."

"You look like an inspector," the little lady said, as she slipped the leader under the clip and gave the lower reel a twist. "How's everything?"

But the inspector wasn't to be bulldozed at any feminine remark. He snooped from one end of the room to the other in the most approved style taught by correspondence detective schools and finally laid his official hand on the young lady's shoulder.

"I'm sorry, miss," he said in a tone which showed that he wasn't sorry in the least, "but I'll have to arrest you for operating without a license."

Without even looking his way, the girl retorted sarcastically:

"Humph! if that ain't just like a man. Why don't you use your eyes? There's my license over there in the corner."

And it was there. A "first-class operator's license." She had passed the examination with flying colors many months before and had been getting excellent screen results.

As for the inspector — what could he say except maybe, "Yer sure gotta hand it to the little lady."

More on Smoking

John L. Hogan of Chillicothe, Mo., has a few words to say on the subject of smoking in projection rooms:

I noticed in the last issue of the NEWS that some projectionist wrote in about smoking in the projection room and that he as good as says that it is all right. Your answer to him was very good, but I wish to make this remark: I have been projecting motion pictures for nearly 14 years and have yet to smoke for the first time in any projection room. Furthermore, I will not allow it even by the manager.

I also say this, that the man who does so should not be allowed to project pictures. He may have all the precautions that are possible to protect from fire, but there are times when if a projectionist was running pictures and something goes wrong just at the time he is getting ready to light his cigar or cigarette, he has got two articles to get out of his hands and at the same time stop his machine. It is a matter of truth that he is going to let one or the other of them go, and there is a good possibility of his forgetting that he has a "smoke" in his mouth. The man who admits that he smokes in the projection room knows he is wrong or he would not conceal his name from the department.

I would like to tell my brother projectionists what I do each day in regards to my work and to give them an idea how to discontinue the practice of punching films full of holes as is being done by a good many of them. In the morning when my films arrive I take them to the projection room and rewind them off on my own reels. Then I take a cue sheet of my own making and write thereon the last scene. When I project the picture on the screen I know just when to make my changeover.

I rewind each reel onto my own reel that I have bought and while I am rewinding them I run them through a clean cloth to get off the dirt that gets onto them while in transit. By doing this I am sure they are clean when they go through the machine.

When I am through with the films I wind them back onto the shipping reels and send them back to the Exchange. Because of the way I treat them I send them back in better condition than when they were received.

I also make out a report sheet and send it with the films so that the Exchange will know that I have looked them over.

It takes time to do all this but the man who is working for a reputation will always want to be trying to do something to better his projection. If he is interested enough he will put in all his time that is necessary to keep his machines and the films in first-class condition at all times. I am enclosing the cue sheet and my report sheet so that if space in the department will permit you can use them.

ANSWER: The cue sheet has been reproduced but because the report blank is similar to many already printed in this department we are omitting it.

With all the precautions that are being taken to make the handling of films in projection rooms as free from danger as possible it does not seem as if any broadminded man would consider smoking as a permissible act. The fact that many do smoke surely does not make it safe for others to try. Why have a pail of water for hot carbon stubs when at the same time the projectionist carries a worse hazard in the front of his face? A carbon stub if laid down will cool off gradually, but a cigarette butt remains for some time as dangerous as ever, besides being less noticeable to the man looking for a place to set a reel or film.

Programme of Pittsburgh Meeting of S.M.P.E.

IT is evident from reports received from the Publicity Manager of P. M. Boyd of Pittsburgh that those present at the coming meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers are to be royally entertained.

It is imperative that all who attend should be on hand promptly at 10 A. M. October 13. At that time, Mayor Babcock of Pittsburgh will welcome the members and offer them the hospitality of his city. Following his address a business session is slated, during which officers will be elected for the ensuing year.

In the evening a banquet will satisfy the inner man physically, with a vaudeville show of unusual characteristics as a side-line. There will be a few short speeches.

So much for Monday. Tuesday will be given up to business and to the reading of papers. During the evening the Engineers will attend another special vaudeville performance; this time at the Davis theatre.

Wednesday, the last day of the convention, will be used to clear up any papers remaining on the list.

The Papers Committee reports a very good program of papers already lined up. A large number of members have signified their intention of attending and present indications point to the most successful of conventions.

H. A. Campe, 5550 Raleigh street, Pittsburgh, Pa., is president of the Society and will preside at the coming meeting.

Trouble With Intermittent

C. R. No. 1055, Paducah, Kentucky:

I have been troubled for the past two weeks and am a bit puzzled over the way my machine has been working.

The mechanism of my machine, a Simplex No. 802, was sent away last June to the Precision Machine Company of New York to be rebuilt. It was returned about two weeks ago and placed on the machine. My trouble is as follows: In adjusting the star and cam, if set too tight it will lock the machine and refuse to run and if not set tight enough, the picture will jump from one side to the other. Now here is the main point: If I set the star and cam just right to keep the machine from locking or jumping it will put on a swell picture until I strike a misframe and in framing the picture my shutter is thrown out of line so far that it is necessary for me to stop and reset my framing device at the bottom of the mechanism.

I have taken the mechanism apart time after time trying to locate the trouble but have failed.

Reply:

In endeavoring to find the trouble with your Simplex mechanism No. 802, there are several possibilities which should be looked into.

First, try your intermittent sprocket and see if there is any play between it and the star wheel shaft. Perhaps the pin holes have become enlarged or the pins have worked out, in which case they should be driven in until the sprocket is absolutely tight on the shaft. Then set your intermittent movement on the lock position and be sure that the mechanism is properly adjusted there. From your letter you have evidently tried this out and have done the best that can be done.

Also, set the film guide tight on the intermittent sprocket, then set your shutter in time and make sure that the screw is perfectly tight on the shutter shaft. It would also be a good idea to watch your machine when running to see that the framing side block on the shutter bracket works freely when framing up and down. If the block should stick use some oil on the gears and work the framing device up and down while the machine is running.

If your picture jumps from one side to the other there must be play somewhere on the star wheel shaft. Investigate this point and see that everything is as it should be.

If, after trying out the above projection the trouble still remains, I would suggest that you get an extra machine head from some theatre supply house and arrange to return your present head No. 802 to the Simplex factory.

Gears Are Worn

B. R. L. No. 1031:

We have two Powers 6-B machines in our projection room. The shutter seems to be forever out of time. We have got new hubs and the shaft and gears are in good condition. Could you offer any suggestions that might remedy the same?

Reply:

If you are sure that your trouble is not in a cut-off blade that is too narrow, then the fault lies in the small gears, 677, 678, 680, 633, 634, 635. Sometimes when a projectionist finds the trouble in these gears he replaces one of them. This will not help. It is necessary to replace the entire six gears just mentioned.

Low Voltage Trouble

L. P. G., No. 799, is having trouble with poor voltage regulation: "Your card received and I wish to ask a question which is rather long to write on a card.

"The theatre I am operating in gets the current from the town power house and the light is sometimes very bad.

"I use A. C. I also use a Fort Wayne Compensarc. I have good light when the voltage is normal, but when the voltage is low the light is bad and the carbons won't burn like they should. I have been thinking of connecting a rheostat in series with the compensarc.

"Would this give me a better light without pulling on the power house very much? I have been thinking of connecting this in series but I wanted to get your advice first."

ANSWER: Bothered as you are with unusually poor voltage regulation, the best way out is to purchase another Compensarc and connect them in multiple. With this arrangement you will have no trouble at times of low voltage.

Placing a rheostat in series with a Compensarc would certainly not give you better results, but would make your light many times worse than it is now.

There would be a potential drop across your rheostat which would reduce the voltage applied to the primary terminals of the Compensarc. Since this is exactly opposite to your needs when your supply voltage is already low, your imagination will tell you what would happen to your light.

A word or two about the second machine you buy. Don't decide to buy another make of transformer to use in multiple with your present Compensarc. Sometimes a projectionist does this to "see how the other type works" or else on the recommendations of a salesman who ought to know better.

Back Issues of News

E. J. D., Lorado, W. Va.:

Your letter of August 5, 1919, at hand. Owing to my sudden moving around I could not answer before.

Let me say here I certainly do appreciate the special projectionist rate for the NEWS. It surely is a wonderful paper. I am well pleased also to be a member of such a league as the N. A. M. L.

Where I am now located I have a 1917 Simplex A. C. 110 V. Use A. C. special carbons and get a dandy picture. I am located in one of those small mining camps way up in the woods and like it first rate.

We run only at night and then only one and a half shows. Use new prints of Paramount and all Specials. By the way, in moving around I missed three copies of the NEWS, Aug. 23, 30 and Sept. 6. Is there any way you can send these to me and the bill at the same time?

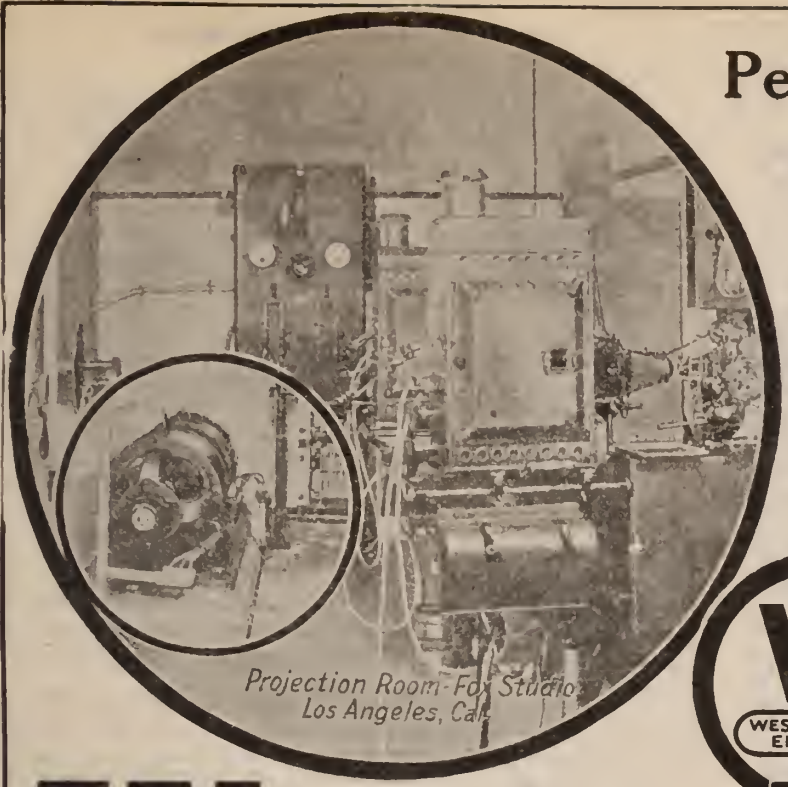
At the present writing I will not go into detail about my equipment as a new machine is on the road for me and when it arrives I have several details I will change and will write you more about later.

REPLY:

The special rate of $1 for a year's subscription to the NEWS is one that should make it possible for every projectionist to have the magazine sent to his home where he can read it in his odd moments.

Sorry to say that we can't supply you with back numbers. We have no extra copies of the issues you missed.

Write us a good article on your new equipment when it arrives.



Machine Binds

V. C., Irving, Ill.:

My machine takes spells when it puts so hard the motor will not pull the load. Is the trouble likely to be in the intermittent gear? It is a Powers 6-A with a Fidelity motor.

ANSWER:

The trouble is apt to be in several places but most probably in the intermittent. When you notice the motor pulling hard again, stop the machine, disconnect the motor and turn the intermittent by the flywheel. If the movement turns hard and appears to bind at certain points in each revolution you have located the trouble. Your eccentric-bushing is too high and should be adjusted again.

Mercury Arc Trouble

A READER from Indiana writes:

I would be pleased to get information through your paper or readers of same in regard to a new rectifier tube bought in 1914 from the General Electric Company. I tried this tube out a few weeks ago and all I could get was a few flashes inside the tube when the arc was struck.

I wrote to the company in regard to the tube but they would not make it good as it had been sold over a year.

Maybe some of your readers have had the same trouble, I think the tube has lost its vacuum.

REPLY:

A mercury arc tube is similar to an incandescent bulb in so far as its life is concerned. Although you do not make it clear in your letter it is probable that you have been using the tube more or less since the time you purchased it in 1914, in which case the number of hours during which it has been in operation exceeds the expected life of the lamp as guaranteed by its makers.

We also believe that the temperature where the tube is kept has considerable to do with its life. Perhaps you have not been careful where the tube has been stored when not in use, with the natural result that the vacuum has been destroyed.

If the tube merely flashes when it is rocked it is good proof that from one of the causes just mentioned the tube has either become filled with air or has leaked air to such an extent that the vacuum is not perfect enough to make the operation of the arc possible.

Your only way is to buy another tube costing around $25. But before doing this you would do well to consider the advantages of other means of rectifying current, such as the motor generator set. Although the mercury tube will continue to be used in motion picture work the proportion of motor generator sets installed in theatres during the present year will be far greater than the number of mercury tube outfits purchased for the same purpose. The first cost may be slightly more but the satisfaction to be gained from the M. G. set will be well worth the difference.

If any of the other users of mercury tubes have had trouble similar to that of the writer of the above letter we hope to hear from him. In the meantime we would like to learn from "Indiana" if his tube has been in more or less continual use since 1914 or has been stored until "a few weeks ago" when he first noticed the defect.

Grinding Noise Eliminated

F. J. A. No. 131: Will you tell me how to remove grinding noise from toggle gear on Powers 6A.

REPLY: Grinding in a gear train is usually caused by the gears "seating" themselves or meshing too closely.

The toggle gear numbered 678 in the Powers Catalog runs between the fly wheel and gear No. 680. This toggle gear used to be made of steel but under certain conditions caused a bad grinding noise. To do away with this the Nicholas Power Company experimented with other types of gears and finally obtained one made of linen, compressed under heavy pressure. This fabric gear does away with all grinding and should be substituted in place of the steel gear which you are now using.

Write to the Nicholas Power Company for a No. 678 gear and you will have no further trouble.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

Our activities for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

Perry Sherman Bobs Up

A POST-CARD marked Corpus Christi and signed by "Sherman" has been received and seems to indicate that our old friend, Perry Sherman, Chief of Projection of the H. H. Elliot Enterprises of that city survived the recent typhoon. The card reads:

Storm has wrecked everything. My technical library and scientific data is a total loss. Am going fishing for a job. Want to locate in North Texas or Oklahoma.

"Liberty" is badly soaked. "Queen," my pet, is total wreck. "Amusu" is also torn up. I lost everything but my wife so am still fighting. Death list will total at least 300.

SHERMAN,
Box 547, Corpus Christi.

COMMENT:

Surely our sympathy goes out to Mr. and Mrs. Sherman. Sherman is one of the country's best projectionists and has surrounded himself with a wonderful library of technical matter. Much of it can probably never be replaced. But his personal knowledge is as great as ever and he will certainly have no trouble in landing another job. Any exhibitor in Texas or Oklahoma who is looking for an A-1 man to take charge of projection in one or more theatres can do no better than employ Sherman. We have reasons to know that his employers up to the time of the catastrophe were so well satisfied with him that they would not allow him to resign. How's that for a recommendation?

The Complete Plan Book

"The Chambermaid's Revenge"

(Mutt and Jeff Comedy—Fox)

MUTT AND JEFF have transferred their activities to a hotel and "The Chambermaid's Revenge" is the result. As usual the tall freak has a soft berth. He is the clerk and Jeff is the porter, bell-hop, elevator boy, doorman and chambermaid. Quite a busy job for the little fellow, isn't it? But that is Jeff's way, or rather it is Mutt's object to see that it is his pal's way. No sooner is the abbreviated comedian finished with the porter's duties than Mutt taps the bell and orders him to put on his doorman's uniform. And so it is hustle every minute. He works with lightning speed, does little Jeff.

Finally a call comes in for a chambermaid and he is forced to don feminine disguise. And we find him tightening the corset strings of a husky guest. He makes a sorry mess of the job with the result that he lands on his ear in the corridor. But he has his revenge on Mutt for when the latter takes his bath, the little freak steals his clothes. And Mutt can never, never, never be called a classic figure in the nude. The tall fellow certainly has a rough time of it. Mutt sends for the fire department when his pal smokes up the hotel with a cigar. And so he has another bath from the business end of a hose.

The elongated chap has a vicious temper once he is aroused and with Jeff in possession of his "goat" and his clothes, he can stand it no longer. He picks up the runt and strips him—strips him right down to his B. V. Ds. The cartoon does not maintain the pace established with "All that Glitters is not Goldfish," still it strikes a happy average. Which is all that is necessary.—Laurence Reid.

"In the Heart of the Jungle"

PAUL J. RAINEY has proven his courage time and again in his pictures, for the camera never lies. But it is doubtful if he was ever put to such desperate straits as in the second chapter of his film, "In the Heart of the Jungle." A foreword states that the camera was secreted in "blinds" in order to approach the beasts of the jungle, which accounts for the jerky action of the picture. The spectator is greeted with a rhinoceros taking his bath in a water hole and a number of African elephants quenching their thirst.

But these scenes are mild compared with the lion hunt. The dogs take up the scent and locate the king of the jungle. But it is a difficult task to coax him out of his lair. Finally goaded to action he makes a terrible charge—a charge which brings him within a few feet from the camera before he is killed. It seems as if he is plunging straight at you. A marvelous shot and one that is thrilling to the extreme. In fact, the thrills of the picture can be appreciated for when it was shown at the Rialto, New York, the orchestra remained silent.—Laurence Reid.

"He Married His Wife"

(Two-reel Christie Comedy released in October through state right exchanges)

IN the opinion of this reviewer, "He Married His Wife" does not come up to the standard set by the other Christie two-reelers.

This does not mean that it is not a good average comedy of the cleaner sort but that it had a hard pace to follow on account of the especially good qualities of the first releases.

Every comedy should have at least some little basis for existing. In other words there should be at least some little excuse for the actions. And while the cast headed by Edith Roberts is clever enough and the direction and settings are up to standard, it does not get the laughs a comedy is expected to secure.

For there is no story. And a nice clean series of actions without the slapstick must have some semblance of a reason for the action. And that is just what this picture lacked. It does not even entertain. Simply a filler because it was built around nothing.

A slapstick comedy does not have to be built around anything because the patrons that enjoy that sort of stuff continually in the rough do not care for any reason or excuse for rapid action.

But when a comedy is produced by a company known for its classy atmosphere of cleanliness and thus appeals to the better class of patrons it should have something to offer besides the cast, the camera and the sets.—Tom Hamlin.

"Starting Out in Life"

(Cuckoo Comedy—Two Reels)

THE first of the Cuckoo Comedies, "Starting Out in Life," has reached the screen. It presents Bobby Burns as its comedian, and he will also be featured in the succeeding comedies. It is too early yet to judge whether blackface work can score upon the screen. Certainly it should be given a thorough trying out. But it strikes us that the Cuckoo people are wise in not depending too much on burnt cork since it is announced that Mr. Burns will alternate as a straight comedian. He is of the old minstrel school in his effort here. And he knows how to score his points in typical low blackface style.

But the material given him here is not productive of laughter though at times it sends out a bit of hilarious fun. Bobby Burns appears as a porter in a hotel and he has a busy time of it in discharging his duties. He is discharged himself in the end though he finds himself a rich man. And that worn out trick of putting on the wrong coat is responsible for his newfound wealth. The comedy is mostly a series of repetitious scenes and the laughter is missing after the second attempt.

What is needed in comedies at the present time are original ideas which must be worked out spontaneously. Otherwise bring on the bathing girls. We understand that Cuckoo has a pretty ensemble. But in the comedy's favor is its absence of slapstick. The two reels are clean and wholesome. And such virtues are a credit to the Cuckoo people. Bobby Burns will no doubt hit his stride the next time up when the flaws of his first picture have been fully appreciated by his sponsors.—Laurence Reid.

Stroheim's Drama Reaches Highwater Mark of Entertainment

ERIC VON STROHEIM has always been a consummate actor. He has proved his histrionic ability as the living symbol of Prussianism in "Hearts of the World," and "The Hearts of Humanity." We little dreamed, however, that he is a master story teller and a very capable director as well. He has come forward as the sponsor of "Blind Husbands," a picture of the eternal triangle, and of all the subjects which have been based upon this favorite theme, his creation looms up as one of the best things ever conceived. Enacted against the Alps, the pictorial appeal is no stronger than its drama. It throbs with vitality and soars with tremendous sweep straight to its climax. And it is always lifelike in plot and characterization.

Mr. Stroheim makes the "other man" unique. He does not impress you as a moral leper or a despoiler of feminine virtue; he only suggests a weakling, a youth irresponsible for his actions. But just as sure as his performance is the skill with which he has woven the dramatic threads together. There is no play for heroics, no bid for big climaxes. These come spontaneously without effort. And so the picture does not assume the aspect of a photoplay but resembles a slice from life. The action is intensity itself and the suspense is at times overpowering — especially when the husband and the lover make the ascent of the Pinnacle. One instinctively feels some impending tragedy.

The summit is reached after a perilous climb. And it surely is a dramatic spot for the climax. And after the lover has revealed his true colors he is left to perish. An uncanny touch depicts the shadows of vultures hovering about waiting for his death. The atmosphere and the details are correct. Nothing is missing to make this picture a greater achievement.— Length 7 Reels.— Laurence Reid.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a big picture and it would do well to exploit it far in advance. Send out streamers and publicize it in every way possible to arouse the interest of your patrons. Use circular letters briefly stating that Eric Von Stroheim's master story of marital infidelity will be at the ———— theatre beginning ————. Emphasize its tremendous theme and the power and sweep of the drama. Use catch lines around the title. Your imagination should work wonders in framing appropriate copy around the title. Emphasize the remarkable scenery, telling that it is a drama enacted against the Alps.

Run stories about the stars who is also the author and director. Feature him big. State that he was responsible for much of the success of "Hearts of the World," and "The Heart of Humanity." Use every possible angle to exploit this remarkable picture. Teasers, throwaways, door-knob hangers, post-cards would be a good plan to work upon. You can spend money liberally here and it will not be wasted. For those who see it will exploit it by word of mouth advertising.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Eric Von Stroheim, who scored such successes in "Hearts of the World," and "The Heart of Humanity," will come to the———— theatre beginning ———— as the star of his own photoplay, "Blind Husbands." This is a powerful subject which he has conceived — a subject which is old in the human family but which is always vital because it is ever with us. The story introduces the eternal triangle with an Alpine setting and the American tourists, Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong, and Lieut. Erich Von Steuben, an Austrian officer composing the triumvirate.

Now the Lieutenant lives for only three things — Wine, Women and Song, and his opportunity presents itself to concentrate upon the second when the Doctor is engrossed with material affairs. Mrs. Armstrong is powerless to resist Steuben's blandishments though the good guide, Sepp, is watching with apprehension. He is deeply indebted to the doctor and waits his opportunity to show his gratitude. The night before the ascent of the Pinnacle is an anxious one to Mrs. Armstrong. Can she keep her marriage vows? In the stillness of the night, the moral leper seeks his prey but Sepp is watching — ever watching. Comes the morrow and the Doctor and the Lieutenant make the perilous ascent.

The summit is reached but the latter's diseased imagination and twisted ideals are not purified. The loneliness, the good that cres out in a man's heart when he feels himself alone with God is not in his soul. A fatal letter falls out of his pocket which incriminates the love-starved woman.

The husband's ideals shattered he begs for the truth. Death is the only alternative. And Steuben admits his guilt which afterwards proves to be a lie. And so he is left to perish on the Pinnacle

THE theme is the same as in former Madlaine Traverse pictures and it runs true to form. She is the society hostess and her husband is the powerful French diplomat who forgives her when she is finally compelled to confess that at one time in early youth she strayed from the straight and narrow path.

It is well directed and acceptably handled by the cast. Photography and laboratory work is satisfactory. The star wears some gorgeous gowns that will undoubtedly please the women and the settings are elaborately in keeping.

Suspense is spoiled by the insertion of sub-titles exposing the relationship in the early part of the picture. The betrayer tries to get his son drunk and then fights with him. A revolver is drawn in the scuffle which finally ends with the fall of the villain through a window to a crushing death. A typical Madlaine Traverse picture.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are:— Metropolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family good puller and generally pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing.— Length five reels.— Released, October 12, "Tom Hamlin."

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Snares of Paris" is the alluring title of a William Fox picture starring Madlaine Traverse, which comes to the ———— theatre for —— days' engagement beginning ————.

It is described as an intensely interesting heart drama which gives the star wide scope for her emotional acting.

Emile Coullard is a prominent French diplomat with a very charming wife whom he adores. He has in preparation some very important manuscript hearing upon the industrial and political future of France.

A tricky stockhroker is trying to obtain some of this information in advance so that he can anticipate the effect it will have upon the stock market and thus profit by the knowledge.

During a great social affair at which the wife is hostess she is called away to the bedside of De Brionne, an aged attorney who is passing away. After her hushand has retired she leaves the house and makes this midnight visit in secret. It devlops that in her carly youth upon coming out of a convent she had heen betrayed and bore a son which her very good friend De Brionne had agreed to take care of. As he is passing away he tells her that her son must henceforth be taken care of by herself and that he is in the notorious Apache Cafe around the corner.

The mother rescues the boy and pledges him to cease drinking absinthe and he gladly promises since he now knows that he now has a real live and very beautiful mother. He is soon installed as her husband's secretary. And the tricky stockhroker in his quest for information is recognized by Madame Coullard as her betrayer, the father of the boy. He tries to get the boy drunk later in a fight he falls out of a window and is killed.

When Emile Coullard comes home and finds the young secretary in his wife's arms she confesses the truth and declares that this boy is her son by a youthful error.

The great diplomat then makes his greatest decision. The big question hrought out is whether a wife should confess to an error she may have made as an innocent young girl.

PROGRAM READER

A glimpse of low life and then back to her accustomed place among the well-to-do.

One error in her early youth brought her remorse although it was in the distant past.

She was now the beloved wife of one of the most powerful diplomats in France.

When she was hostess to a great social gathering one night she received a note that perturhed her. And at midnight, after the reception, she retired apparently, but only to deceive her husband.

For a few minutes afterwards she secretly left the house and went to the bedside of the dying friend who had sent the note.

This friend told her that he had cared as best he could for the child she had left in his care after being betrayed. But that the boy was down to the cafe on the corner undoubtedly drunk.

It was then that the mother realized with a shock that her baby had grown all these years and had now entered man's estate.

How she rescued the hoy and gave him a real mother in berself and how she and the boy came in contact with her betrayer, the boy's father, in the act of rohhing her husband, is told graphically in a William Fox picture coming to this theatre next week.

Madlaine Traverse is the emotional star that so intensely portrays the role of the young mother in this vivid drama.

Madge Kennedy Has a Charming Role in Unique Comedy

MADGE KENNEDY can offer thanks to Goldwyn for the scintillating comedy it has provided her in "Strictly Confidential," an adaptation of Jerome K. Jerome's story, "Fanny and the Servant Problem." The idea of a chorus girl who marries a Lord and discovers that his servants are her relatives is unique to say the least and it has been made the most of by the star, her brilliant support, and Clarence Badger, the director. As ideas go it is hardly elaborate enough for feature length but the deft touches, the broad comedy strokes introduced by Mr Badger and the star are so cleverly conceived that one has no time to think of plot shortcomings.

Of course the fun is derived from her ladyship endeavoring to conceal her relationship from her husband and of her relatives attempting to teach her how to be a lady. It is rich characterization that is revealed. The spirit of 'give and take' between the butler uncle and his mistress forms the basis of the most delicious comedy that has come from the screen in some time. The story has reached the stage as "The New Lady Bantock," and as "The Rainbow Girl," but the screen version is every whit as good. What is lost in dialogue and captivating song is more than made up in atmosphere and the brilliant achievement of Miss Kennedy.

Never has she conveyed her strong sense of humor, her excellent pantomime so splendidly. One cannot detail her delightful touches, nor the playful attitudes struck off by Mr. Badger. Every thing they do is spontaneous. And a word for Herbert Standing. He plays the butler with an admirable spirit of make-believe. You will like Miss Kennedy and this picture, and so will your patrons.—Length 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Madge Kennedy, the delightful Goldwyn star, strikingly demonstrates her ability to portray a variety of characters in her latest picture, "Strictly Confidential," which comes to the ———— theatre, beginning ———— This story by the famous novelist, Jerome K. Jerome, concerns an English actress who marries a lord, whose servants are all relatives of hers. Early in the tale, she comes to the Lord's castle, an orphan; but the rigid decorum of the servants make life impossible for her. She runs away, goes back to the stage and makes an instantaneous hit.

During this phase of her career she meets an artist and falls in love with him. She does not know that he is the Lord Bantock from whose castle she escaped not very long since. However, they are married and return to the ancestral home. Here the new Lady Bantock finds herself hedged about by her relatives, who are now her servants. Innumerable complications result from the old butler's attempts to curb the happy spirit of his niece, now his mistress. The haughty fellow believes firmly in family traditions, which are not subscribed to by his niece. Moreover, her position is made more difficult by her decision not to disclose her family relations to her husband. However, when she can no longer bear the burden of silence, she confesses to her Lord and discovers that life at the castle is henceforth to be joy and sunshine.

The story trips along with the airy personality of Miss Kennedy. The dramatic climax in the life of the new lady and her depression over the fact that her relatives insist upon obeying the conventions of the past, create some of the funniest comedy moments ever screened.

Vivian Martin Comes Forward with a Captivating Comedy

IT is good to see Vivian Martin away from the sticky saccharine rôles which have been her allotment in the past. She is not a comedienne mind you; the ineffable charm of her femininity is not hers to waste in dispensing broad humor. But she scores here in a quiet way. It is her privilege to generate good nature but not as it is identified with "glad sisters" and "little mothers," characters too freely used by her in the past. So "His Official Fiancee" may be set down as the most satisfying picture she has ever had.

The novel plot and the characterization are full of quaint charm and the story travels along sending out its merriment, its breath of romance and its human note in a most enjoyable manner. A stenographer becomes her employer's official fiancee for business reasons only. And after extravagant counterplotting is indulged in she discovers that he is not the stern, relentless human machine of the office but a very likable (even lovable) sort of man and so she becomes his real fiancee. She is not exactly sure of her self; neither is he. And a clever display of comedy balanced with a dash of pathos is extracted in their attempt to "break the ice."

It is a picture which builds surely and swiftly to its climax and embellished always with rich detail. No actress could improve upon Miss Martin's performance here. She brings a delicate touch to her rôle. Forrest Stanley makes an excellent foil. And two jolly, old duffers, who are ever embarrassing the couple with pertinent questions, are admirably played by Robert Bolder and Tom Ricketts.—Length 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Vivian Martin, the charming Paramount-Artcraft star, will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her latest photoplay entitled "His Official Fiancee." This is a delightful story by Berta Ruck and it makes an ideal vehicle for the star's piquant personality. The same sort of character is found here as in Miss Martin's last picture, "The Third Kiss," in that it presents a girl who runs things, including a man. As Monica Trant the star is a stenographer employed in the London office of William Waters, a stern business man. He summons her and tells her it is necessary for him to pose the next few weeks as a man engaged to be married. And he offers her the position of "official fiancee" for a money consideration

Pressed for funds, she agrees to the arrangement and complications and fun starts that moment. Monica discovers to her surprise, that, given the proper surroundings, her stern "fiancee" is not the great bear the office has always considered him. So a warm friendship springs up between them. The girl accompanies the Waters family to a health resort and it is not long before this friendship turns into love. Some days later, Waters releases Monica from their official engagement. He explains that the idea of an "official fiancee" occurred to him as a means of stalling off an unwelcome marriage. In the end she consents to be his real fiancee.

The picture carries an unusual story and the action sparkles throughout. It is a rollicking story founded upon a unique situation and it affords the star plentiful opportunities to reveal her charming personality.

CATCH LINES

She agreed to be the fiancee of her employer. Oh, no! There was no love between them; she agreed to be his fiancee for business reasons only. Then things begin to happen. All sorts of things. Maybe she lost her heart to him, who knows? See "His Official Fiancee."

They certainly were a strange acting couple to the rest of the world. Why the very idea to be engaged and not show a bit of affection for one another? But the world didn't know that the engagement was only a business proposition. How did it end? See "His Official Fiancee."

Girls can wear rings and not be engaged. Vivian Martin wears one and is engaged — officially engaged. Not a bit of love lost in the engagement either — not until a horrid French girl arrived on the scene. Then it was different. See "His Official Fiancee."

She posed as his fiancee but didn't show any love in the engagement. It was purely a business proposition. But when she found out that he wasn't a mean, horrid old bear, why her heart fluttered and — See "His Official Fiancee," the DIFFERENT Comedy.

Pronounced An Average Program Picture

THIS one promises heavy drama at the opening with plotters in the foreground, but the manner in which the principal characters interpret their roles soon develops this into a light comedy drama with a few touches of the heavier stuff injected again towards the finish.

Stuart Holmes is cast for the hero and is somewhat out of his element. He was far better in his former pictures as a screen villain. There is nothing morbid about the picture. It is clean and built solely for entertainment purposes and will pleasantly satisfy most of the patrons.

The photography is good and continuity is clear-cut, while the cast is satisfactory as a whole. But to a constant attender at motion picture theatres the story and action do not ring true. An average program picture.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are; Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, average puller and not generally pleasing; Family, good puller and fairly pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.— Length five reels.— Released, October 12.— Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Love, Honor and ?" is the question solved in the Hallmark picture coming to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

Stuart Holmes is the hero and Ellen Cassidy is the heroine in this story of Julia Burnham's, and it shows where a husband successfully uses his wife in emphasizing the third word of the triangle.

His wife is entertaining a large group of friends in their Long Island home when the officer returns from France expecting to agreeably surprise her.

But she does not treat him as warmly as he could have wished and he soon finds that she has become addicted to cigarette smoking and gambling. And she resents his demands that she cease these vices

Then he reminds her of her marriage vow but the word obey had no meaning for her. There were two visitors present, Butler Hayes and Ruby Sensora. They plotted together to separate the couple. Miss Sensora vamped the husband and Mr. Hayes made fervent love to the wife. They were both repulsed but not before both husband and wife had discovered each other in what looked like very compromising positions.

It was then that the husband ordered Hayes out of the house. And this led to another quarrel between the married couple. She resented his ordering and accused him of absorbing too much of the army atmosphere. She chided him with attempting a social court martial.

He then seized her bodily and carried her to his airplane. After a short trip they landed on a small island upon which his hunting lodge was located. He compelled her to do the housekeeping which she at first refused angrily to do. The third member of the eternal triangle appeared again and begged her to elope with him and when she refused he attacked her.

When her husband returned in time to rescue her she decided then and there that she loved him and needed a constant protector. And she promised to love, honor and obey.

PROGRAM READER

When he returned from France where he had been an officer in the aviation corp it just seemed that he brought the army spirit with him and wanted to sort of order her around and choose her friends for her.

To the wife who had a mind of her own this was humiliating. She resented it and told him so.

She accused him of trying to court-martial society.

This domestic rebellion did not make things very pleasant for the young couple.

Especially as there was a man at the house party who tried to make love to her. And to make it still worse there was a woman at this same house party that wanted to win the husband.

The husband reminded his wife of her marriage vow where she had promised to love, honor and obey.

But the word "Obey" was not recognized by the young wife. She was not a bad wife but she did not want to be ordered about by a domineering husband.

"Love, Honor and ?" is the title of a Hallmark production scheduled to play this theatre next week.

When the husband finally in desperation abducts his own wife and flies away with her in his airplane to an abandoned island he has as big a fight on his hands as ever.

Andersen Scores in Symphony of Darkest Russia

THE soviet decree nationalizing the woman of Russia and making them the property of the state is the foundation for the theme of Universal's latest picture, "Common Property," which presents Robert Andersen. This edict had an authentic character about it at the time which raised a lot of discussion, although it is generally discredited now. But regardless whether it is truthful or not there is no denying its force as a basis of dramatic entertainment.

This identical theme has been used before on the screen to fit Norma Talmadge's personality, but in her picture it soared beyond the realm of reality. Here it is deftly incorporated so that the drama builds straight to its climax. Granted that it is a single track idea, and that there are no elements of sweetness and light to balance its gray ingredients, yet it is always interesting because it is made to appear real. You sympathize with the Russian who is trying to extricate his family and who finally submits to the inevitable.

The happy ending may be arbitrarily forced here but the sight of American troopers coming to the rescue of the despairing wives and daughters is a welcome one under the circumstances. This is one instance where an adherence to truth can be overlooked. The atmosphere is suggestive and the details are well arranged. Robert Andersen acts the distracted husband and father with feeling, while Nell Craig and Colleen Moore as his wife and daughter respectively, contribute excellent support. Length six reels — Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Common Property," a photoplay based upon the situation that would ensue were the Russians permitted to carry out their project of nationalizing women so that they would become the common property of every man who desired them will be shown at the ——— theatre beginning ———. Robert Andersen, the Universal star, is seen in the role of Paval Pavlovitch, a Russian, who has married an American girl, and who comes under the salacious mandate which would sacrifice his loved ones on the altar of lust. The decree is issued which announces that "Women between the ages of seventeen and thirty-five years are declared to be the property of the state for the use of its citizens."

It seemed inevitable that the Russian's wife and daughter should register for the use of any male citizen of the Empire who took out a certificate stating his desire to claim a woman of the state. Passports were refused Pavlovitch. And just when matters seemed at their worst he discovered that his old servant had taken out a certificate claiming his wife and that the son of the village priest had taken out a certificate entitling him "to use" of the daughter. At the moment when matters look blackest for the little family a troop of American cavalry is seen clattering up the street. A subsequent battle between the troopers and the Russian mob in the streets of Saratov is the climax to this interesting story. Thus the salacious edict is withdrawn and Pavlovitch is happy.

Mr. Andersen, who was Monsieur Cuckoo in "Hearts of the World." portrays the role of the Russian husband and father with remarkable depth and feeling, while Nell Craig in the opposite role contributes splendid assistance. Others in the cast are Colleen Moore, Frank Leigh, Arthur Jasmine and Arthur Maude. The picture was produced under the direction of Paul Powell from a story by Elliot J. Clawson.

CATCH LINES

Are American women safe in Russia to-day? The answer to this question is dramatically given in "Common Property," the Universal picture starring Robert Andersen.

In the scarlet hour when the Russian soviet issued a decree nationalizing all women, he was denied passports by which he hoped to get his American wife and their daughter out of the country. What happened? See "Common Property."

"Common Property" in Russia today means the possession of all women for the use of the state. "Common Property" —— next ———— at this theatre.

The decree was issued nationalizing all women. What was he to do? No passports were given him. Did he submit to the inevitable? See Robert Andersen in "Common Property."

This Comedy Will Entertain Generally

A LIGHT comedy-drama with a few melodramatic punches inserted at convenient intervals to supply the essential action demanded by picture-goers of to-day. The star is in an unaccustomed rôle portraying the young, petulant and headstrong daughter of a Wall street magnate and, therefore, commands very little sympathy.

But this same rôle makes possible the comedy, and the taming of this "wildcat" registers several very good comedy twists that earn the laughs. Cast, direction and continuity are satisfactory but the photography is poor in a few of the interiors owing to bad lighting arrangements.

The sub-titles are exceptionally clever and although many of the situations are rather far fetched this story is primarily farce comedy and will entertain generally. Most of the scenes are exteriors and there are several good fights.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.—Length 5 reels.—Released October 5.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Impossible Catherine" is the Virginia Pearson photoplay to be shown at the ———— theatre for ——— days beginning ————.

In support of the star are Sheldon Lewis, William B. Davidson, and J. H. Gilmour. Virginia Pearson has an entirely different role in this picture than any part she has generally been accustomed to interpret. She is the petulant, willful, headstrong, pampered daughter of a wealthy Wall Street magnate, whom she rules with a rod of iron.

She is the leading spirit in a society of women whose chief propaganda is to prove that women are far superior to men and that after all is said and done that men are little more than insects. And Catherine Kimberly has such a temper to augment her violent assertions that they call her "Impossible Catherine."

When she almost stampedes a meeting of the Yale boys in New York she actually insults one of them, John Henry Jackson of Canada. He takes it in good spirit and when informed that she is Grant Kimberly's daughter he declares that he would tame the wildcat.

He informs her father of this and guarantees to take the young spitfire off his hands, but the father thinks that Jackson is simply crazy to even contemplate such a thing. When he sees the girl she takes his straw hat off and throws it in a pool. But all this does not phase Jackson. He merely smiles and gets busy.

How he takes her up in his airplane with the marriage license and forces her to either agree to marry him or step off the plane he gives a very modern version of "The Taming of the Shrew." And at the point of a gun superinduced by a fifty dollar bill he forces a minister to marry them.

When she escapes up north he abducts her and places her in the kitchen on his rance and forces her to do menial work. But he couldn't make a dent in her indomitable spirit. Finally when he was wounded defending her she realized that she wanted a lord and master and that he was the particular man she desired.

PROGRAM READER

She was willful, she was headstrong and aggressive.
And she was pampered, petulant and precocious.
Outside of that she was all right.
At least, so thought John Henry Jackson.

He knew that she had the least mite of a temper such as snatching his straw hat off and throwing it in a pool, kicking him in the shins, pulling his hair in fits of rage, refusing to wash the dishes, and a hundred other little airy things.

But he loved her, John Henry did,— so there.

He spent his spare time reading "The Taming of the Shrew." After profiting by this literary gem he started a little campaign of his own to tame this little wild woman from New York.

By force, by airplane, and by land and river, he finally conquered the spirit of this rebellious girl and compelled her love and, listen folks,— he also compelled her obedience.

She was known as "Impossible Catherine," and that is the title of the photoplay coming to this theatre next week. If you want to laugh and chuckle and finally roar in exquisite merriment you must attend this theatre and see Virginia Pearson in "Impossible Catherine."

SUGGESTIONS

After you have hooked this picture your first good bet is the title, then the star, and finally, the cast. "Impossible Catherine," with material from the story, program reader and catch lines on this page, can be very thoroughly exploited in newspaper advertising and publicity and also on throw-aways, heralds, etc.

(ROBERTSON-COLE-EXHIBITORS MUTUAL)

THE CAST

Dr. Kitty Kelly ..... Bessie Barriscale
Bob Lang ..... Jack Holt
Sheriff ..... J. J. Dowling
Jerry Williams ..... Wedgewood Nowell
Lola ..... Mildred Manning

By M. B. Havey.
Scenario by H. C. Hickman.
Directed by Howard Hickman.

Light Material for Bessie Barriscale's Talent

BESSIE BARRISCALE has bid her sympathetic rôles goodby for the time being in order to show her capabilities in a humorous characterization. Which leads us to state that the change is not for the best unless she can strike a higher average with her material. "Kitty Kelly, M. D." is a mild offering which depends upon its local color supplied by humorous types for success since the sparse plot does not have any sustaining qualities. The situations are arbitrarily conceived especially where villainy is dragged in by the heels. And the story spends itself early as far as the characterization is concerned.

Kitty Kelly, a fair Easterner, and a recent graduate of a medical school, hears the call of the wild and puts up her shingle in a mining camp town of the West. And when the humorous angle of patients waiting for treatment loses its mirth provoking power through repetition, a melodramatic turn is ushered in which robs the story of its whimsical touch and fills it full of crudities.

Howard Hickman illuminates the picture at times with his treatment of the characters. Comedy touches here and there compensate somewhat for the banal, melodramatic twist. Miss Barriscale is not adept at humorous characterization. The chance was hers to make the rôle sparkle with color and vim as the name indicated, but she elected to become serious and her opportunity was lost to show her versatility. She seems unable to forget her "weepy" rôles of the past.— Length five Reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"Kitty Kelly, M. D." which is offered at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week with the emotional star, Bessie Barriscale, in the title role, is one of the most delightful stories the screen has shown in some time. It presents a unique characterization in the female doctor who journeys from the East to put up her shingle in a lonely mining camp of the West. And because she had a bit of Irish in her and was charming in the bargain the miners haunted her waiting room with every ailment listed in the almanac.

Bob Lang, the ranch foreman, had the inside track to her affections until she learned that he was addicted to liquor. And to cure him of his weakness she promised not to see him until his probationary period had expired. Lucky for Kitty, however, that he broke his promise to stay away from her for he came to the rescue when she was intrigued by Jerry Williams, the proprietor of the saloon. This move on the latter's part aroused the jealousy of his common law wife, the squaw, Lola. And when she implored him to marry her he refused and abused her shamefully. And so she killed him. But Jerry was wearing Bob's hat at the time of his death with the result that the foreman was convicted on circumstantial evidence.

But Kitty, being a detective as well as a doctor, solved the mystery and established his innocense. His heart fluttering badly ever since Kitty came to camp, she promised to cure him by becoming his wife. The action is crowded with surprises and not alone does the picture possess some clever comedy situations but a strong vein of dramatic suspense which the players handle capably. Howard Hickman adapted and directed the picture from a story by M. B. Haver.

CATCH LINES

Did you ever have any desire to call in a lady doctor when you were ill? Suppose she was the only doctor in your town and not only knew her business but was beautiful in the bargain. You would decide never to get well wouldn's you? See "Kitty Kelly, M.D."

She came from the East and put up her shingle in a rough mining camp. And the boys all called to see Kitty Kelly, M.D. She could blarney them with her Irish, care them with her medicines and fascinate them with her beauty.

Girls — suppose you were recent graduates of a medical school and the chance came to settle in the West and practice medicine among a lot of rough miners. Would you go? See what Bessie Barriscale did in "Kitty Kelly, M.D."

The big rancher waited to have his heart examined and when she applied her stethoscope, he embraced her and wouldn't let her go. His heart was surely acting badly. Did she cure him? See Bessie Barriscale in "Kitty Kelly, M. D."

Gentlemen:-

We wish to advise you that we were greatly pleased with the reception Miss Geraldine Farrar received in her newest Goldwyn picture "THE WORLD AND ITS WOMAN".

In our opinion it is the best work Miss Farrar has ever done for the screen. The timeliness of the story, the impressiveness and magnitude of the sets, and the action are such that we received a great many favorable comments from our patrons of both the New York Strand and the new Brooklyn Strand.

"THE WORLD AND ITS WOMAN" played to a capacity business for a week in each house, and we attribute this success to the appeal of Miss Farrar's wonderful acting, and to the great strides toward perfection of the Goldwyn producing organization.

Yours very truly,

a reproduction of the Symphony Orchestra

The Robert-Morton is an organ scientifically schemed and toned to render dignified classics and popular effects.

The Rare Combination of spiritual sweetness with all the necessary pep and jazz affords the Robert-Morton the ideal musical interpreter of the joys and sorrows of the screen.

This Instrument is recognized as the organ achievement of the day from an artistic and box office standpoint.

The Robert-Morton solves the problem of reflecting screen action with a sympathetic musical atmosphere without the necessity of a costly orchestra.

The Organ is conceived without complications—thereby eliminating a long course of training for efficient playing.

The Robert-Morton is constructed in various sizes — with a range of prices for the large and small theatre—also terms if necessary.

Put Your Finger on the Map, Touching Any City in America

Wherever your finger rests, in any community from 20,000 to 6,000,000 population, there you find the largest and most important first-run theatres playing the powerful productions released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

In a crowded market, with many organizations making or claiming to make big pictures, if you hit a town where some of the big first-run factors are shut out, stop and take a census and you will find that the productions released by Hodkinson are not the ones barred.

Hodkinson releases are in and playing.

This situation is not due to any special liking or affection for our organization or its membership.

It is due to the bigness and the merit of the pictures we release.

Producers of big pictures have not sought us as their releasing mechanism except on the ground that we do more for a picture we take and like than any other distributor can do.

We have said before—and we say again now—that the Hodkinson organization does not have to force over on the exhibitors below-grade pictures to meet our overhead expenses.

We give good pictures everything that's in us to give—effort, brains and intelligence—and everything they deserve.

Having big and worth-while productions explains why we are in all the big first-runs, and are serving four thousand theatres besides, while some other organizations cannot get in.

A TWO-WAY TEST

Single-picture booking and direct dealing between producer and exhibitor have been put to the test.

In releasing

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS

in "HIS MAJESTY, THE AMERICAN"

to the theatres of the country, United Artists Corporation opened the way for exhibitors to secure for their houses the productions of the screen's foremost artists on an absolute basis of individual merit.

The results have more than justified our faith in the plan.

On the exhibitors' side, the test has demonstrated that motion pictures of known drawing power can be individually appraised, individually rented and individually exploited to undreamed-of success.

On the side of United Artists Corporation, the test has given even greater strength to the basic principles of the company — single-picture booking only, direct dealing with each individual theatre, and no affiliation or understanding with outside interests, booking agencies or circuits that seek to control either the producer or the exhibitor.

In other words, full independence for the exhibitor and for the producer, so that they may meet freely on common ground.

What Happened on the Night of May Thirteenth?

Did the Film Advance in Power Beyond the Stage?

Was the Eighth Art Born?

"ON that night the screen jumped five years," says The Literary Digest, and "With the showing of 'Broken Blossoms' a new art indeed arrived, an art as important as music or poetry; and David Wark Griffith immortalized himself," adds Charles Hanson Towne, editor of McClure's Magazine. "Broken Blossoms," according to Amy Leslie of the Chicago News, "is an eloquent and decisive flight beyond the speaking stage."

"It is the most beautiful motion picture we have ever seen, or ever expect to see; and if we were a director, we should give up all idea of ever trying to be original and spend all our time trying to do something as nearly as possible like this wonderful, fragile thing. Don't miss it, oh, please don't miss it!" urges Harriet Underhill of the New York Tribune.

Percy Hammond, writing in the Chicago Tribune, notes that "never in the annals of theatrical doxology have such hosannas been raised," and Ashton Stevens of the Chicago Examiner refers to it "As quick as a nerve and as close as a sonnet, it may not be everybody's picture, but we should be sorry to be one for whom it is not."

"I am a seasoned theater goer, a man of the theater myself, grown ripe in the profession, and my eyes have witnessed the dramas of many countries; but in many a year, I have not been so moved, so stirred as by this lyric masterpiece," declares Herman Devries in the Chicago Examiner. The New York Sun acknowledges it to be "the most artistic photoplay yet produced," and the New York Telegram goes further and says "it is as if Dickens had spoken by means of the camera. Moreover there is a glamour as if Pierre Loti or Victor Hugo had joined forces with Mr. Griffith. Is it any wonder it is the masterpiece of the films?"

"Such art, so real one can think only of the classics and of the masterly paintings remembered through the ages, so exquisite, so fragile, so beautifully and poetically fragrant is 'Broken Blossoms,'" is the tribute paid by Louella Parsons of the New York Telegraph.

New York Paid $2.50 to See It, Says Current Opinion

"Mr. Griffith has brought out another film to intrigue the public and amaze his rivals; and sophisticated New Yorkers are only too willing to pay $2.50 a seat and war tax for the privilege of judging it," according to Current Opinion. The best seats sold for $3.00. "It is a motion picture that converts dramatic critics, to whom the film is an anathema, into film fanatics," admits Charles Collins of the Chicago Post.

"It would be impossible for the greatest master of languages to picture the emotions as Mr. Griffith has perpetuated them. He has far exceeded the power of the written word in 'Broken Blossoms,'" writes Louis Gardy in the New York Call. "Mr. Griffith should think of a new name other than photoplay, for his productions are so different from other directors' that they require a separate classification," says the New York Herald.

The Creator is David Wark Griffith

"Mr. Griffith," states the Chicago News, "is the most imaginative and sane American who ever revolutionized the theater when it needed an emancipator." And Virginia Tracy, writing in the New York Tribune, adds "The maker of 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Intolerance,' 'Hearts of the World,' and now 'Broken Blossoms'—this man could make a world."

Virginia Dale of the Chicago Journal advances the opinion that "Griffith stands alone," and Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Tribune, says "Again he has shown them all how to do it." And "with a vision even bigger than his tools," thinks Herman Devries in the Chicago Examiner. "Yet here is an amazing thing for us to ponder—that Griffith is the only living American to conquer his art," states the Los Angeles Times, and referring to the art of motion picture productions, the New Republic says "Mr. Griffith is the great creator and inventor of its youth, and still remains the dominant leader."

What Griffith Has Achieved With His Players

"Lillian Gish arrived in 'Broken Blossoms' as a great tragedienne," is the statement of Herman Devries, the well-known critic, writing in the Chicago Examiner. Percy Hammond of the Chicago Tribune was so impressed with her that he wrote "In case you have good taste in acting, you will enjoy her When upon the stage, was there ever a better picture of absolutely untheatrical terror, which is a difficult emotion of the drama, than when Miss Gish hides in the closet?" "She ranks as one of the rare great screen actresses," thinks Louis Gardy of the New York Call, and the New York Times adds that "with a rôle so difficult as to be beyond the reach of almost any actress one can call to mind, it is well within her grasp."

The New York Sun notes that "as the mystic Chinese lover of gentle spirit, Richard Barthelmess played with a delicacy of feeling and sense of the Oriental character that distinguishes him." "He throws a haunting spell of poetry over the whole play; his long, deep eyes weep without tears as his poetry drips honey without words," is the tribute paid him by the Chicago News. "He conveys the part better than any other screen player one can call to mind," writes Thomas Oliphant of the New York Mail.

"No actor, not even Lynn Harding, could so impudently materialize the father as Donald Crisp," according to the Chicago News. "And he does notable work," adds the New York American.

D. W. Griffith, Originator and Leader

Since the days when Mr. Griffith originated the technique that marked the first advance in the higher development of motion pictures, his creations have been and are the best. His vision foresaw the screen as it is today, and his efforts have been largely responsible for changing what was a novelty in the early days, into a great art.

The supremacy of Griffith films is expressed in the fact that they are the only films shown around the world as special productions. In emphasizing this, the Washington Herald states, "Again and again Mr. Griffith has proved he is the only producer who can make $2.00 pictures for the large theatres and KEEP THEM THERE." During the past six years, he has made "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," and five of a short-story series.

All Griffith Films are signed with the trademark "D. G." and the name "Griffith," and none are genuine without them.

Whatever your personal opinion may be, to be abreast of the times you must see "the eighth art," of which "Broken Blossoms" is the only expression.

"Broken Blossoms" will be distributed by the United Artists' Corporation and may be seen in many of the largest motion picture theaters during the week of October 20th

YOU WILL BE IN RIGHT IF YOU PLAY "IN WRONG" with Jack Pickford

A picture that everyone will want to see, as it is a slice out of their own lives, the time when they fought over their best girl in the days of the old swimming hole and the rag doll. Full of fun and pathos.

Reviewers are a hard boiled lot, but flash them something real good and they'll show they are human.

When they saw the first two of these comedies they held their sides and wrote as follows:

"They certainly mark a big advance in this comedian's offerings, and the reviewer feels confident that they will register heavily with the exhibitor and the public. . . . 'From Hand to Mouth,' a wonderful array of fast moving and laughable events. . . . If the comedian's attempts to recruit an army of bluecoats don't make them laugh themselves out of their seats, audiences are hopeless. . . . These comedies should captivate and thoroughly entertain any audience anywhere."

We Sell Not to You, But For You

The selling of pictures to you is the idea of selling pictures for you.

To achieve a single sale is not important. But to prove so valuable to you that you become a regular customer is vitally important.

To make you a regular customer it is up to us to make regular customers for you.

If you fail to make money there is danger that we may lose you as a customer.

Wherefore, we must insist that every unit in our organization concentrates on helping you to make money.

Our idea of helping the exhibitor is not to begin when he signs the contract, but to start when the production of the picture commences.

Neglecting none of the necessities of great artistic success, we still must keep in sight the main idea, the profit of the exhibitor and our consequent profit.

Of prime importance in this is the establishment of the exhibitor on the basis of a business partner.

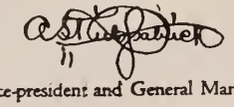
Therefore your criticism and advice will be accepted as the suggestion of one business associate to another.

It is our mutual interest that the product be the best, the price fair, and that the square deal shall dominate business relations.

No industry can survive if any particular division of the industry plays the hog.

The distributor cannot gouge the exhibitor and expect not to suffer from the reaction which affects the entire industry.

The exhibitor cannot compel the distributor and producer to operate without profit and expect not to suffer from a poor quality of product.



If the sense of fair dealing does not dictate this a desire for profits and business horse sense should.

Producers and distributors will flourish through the exhibitors' prosperity and we know it.

We are building a strong house on firm foundations. We are building with the exhibitor and for the exhibitor—thereby for ourselves.

We welcome your partnership and co-operation in a great enterprise.

One of those unheralded pictures that is going to sweep the country on a wave of enthusiastic motion picture audiences. Never before has a motion picture been recieved by a reviewing committee with such unqualified exclamations of praise. You'll appreciate its unprecedented value when you have seen it.

Here are a few remarks of the reviewers:

"It is as near a hundred per cent picture as I have ever seen."

"The most original mystery story I have ever seen."

"Interest sustained to the very end."

"The story has very fine advertising possibilities, and, taken as a whole, is an excellent production."

"This production meets practically all the requirements of a perfect picture."

"It is a picture that would interest any audience."

¶"T. H. GRANDJEAN, in charge of publicity and advertising of the Saenger Amusement Company, which has about seventy theaters in New Orleans and territory about there, advised me that Motion Picture News is the only trade journal which goes to every one of their theaters. The managers are requested to carefully file all copies so that they can get any articles from it for use in their publicity when so directed by the main office. Grandjean finds the Plan Book very helpful and depends on this for a great deal of the publicity used."—Extract from report of J. C. Jessen, of Motion Picture News.

¶THE theater circuit embracing seventy houses has high standards of quality, efficiency and value. The tests which they apply to productions and to their advertising—and these tests are responsible for the phenomenal growth that brings a circuit of seventy theaters into being—are the same measures by which they judge the picture trade journals. The selection by such a circuit of Motion Picture News for the exclusive use of their managers is the strongest possible indorsement that could be given to the publication that is always "First in every test and first by every test."

Volume 20, No. 18 October 25, 1919

Shots at Random

THIS job of publishing a trade paper under trying conditions is not half so bad when you have the experience that has come to Motion Picture News during the past few weeks.

Subscribers have emphasized more than ever the feeling that we have always had in this organization — that Motion Picture News and its readers form one large family united for common service.

This feeling results from the response to notices sent out some two weeks ago telling of the unusual conditions we were facing and our inability to promise more than "our best possible under the circumstances."

What organization dedicated to service would not be cheered by the receipt of dozens of expressions such as the following:

"We are in receipt of your letter saying that there is a possibility that we must be prepared to do without your valuable paper because of the printing troubles. To miss The News is like losing an old friend. In fact, it is losing a friend, as each week I look forward with pleasure to its arrival. The News is first, second and third as a trade paper. There are none in the market within hailing distance."— H. E. Cane, Manager, West Street Theatre, Coudersport, Pa.

"Very sorry to hear of the trouble in New York but if you keep us supplied with The Complete Plan Book we will get along very nicely. I am taking three trade papers but use The News and The Plan Book almost exclusively."— R. E. Pratt, Electric Theatre Company, Winfield, Iowa.

"I shall certainly regret it if the printing situation keeps even a few weeks' issues of The News from us. I consider The News the finest example of a trade paper that ever came to my attention."— T. R. Baylies, New Bedford Olympia Company, New Bedford, Mass.

"You once asked your subscribers for suggestions to improve The News. About the only suggestion I can make is to leave no stone unturned to make arrangements to get it printed and in the hands of your subscribers if it is at all possible. I need it every week."— A. P. Boots, Greenfield, Indiana.

Is it any wonder that we feel a warm satisfaction in having maintained unbroken our record of continuous, every-week service to the family of Motion Picture News readers? And that, through serving them, we have not failed in our service to the manufacturers, distributors, and other advertisers.

A trade journal should be more than valued; it must approach necessity. And necessity knows no handicaps.

Reading the Same Mail

THE same mail from which the above quotations are taken brings further evidence of a phase of trade paper value that is apparently given little consideration at times in the busy rush of Times Square film activities.

Too often it would seem that many persons think of a trade paper merely as a bound-together collection of advertisements, publicity and reviews,— to be hurriedly skimmed by the exhibitor and then cast aside.

The letters above give some indication of what The Complete Plan Book now means to thousands of exhibitors as a valued working tool. Another angle of service is given in the following words from Exhibitor Boots' letter:

"We are building a first class house here and were considering the putting in of Mazda lamps. I was about to write for your advice when you started a discussion on the matter.

"We are playing now at six and eleven cents and losing money. We have opposition. There are lots of angles to the proposition — what shall we do? I was about to ask your opinion when you started a discussion that is just what I want.

"Is it any wonder then that the only suggestion I can offer is to get this matter printed if possible?"

News Knows No Embargo

EVEN when printing troubles come along news continues to happen with its accustomed regularity. Perhaps the biggest event of months is the straightening out of the Robertson Cole-Exhibitor Mutual tangle, and the stepping forth of Frank Hall to broader activity.

Filmdom is watching with particular interest the progress of Robertson-Cole. A clean-cut organization, which has stepped along with remarkable speed, Robertson-Cole is known to have under way some plans of far-reaching magnitude.

The new alignment offers an opportunity for the development of these plans in the possession of a selling organization directly responsible and directly inspired. The possibilities for service and growth are big and the personnel is there to take advantage of them.

San Antonio Bids For Film Fame

Open House Invitation Extended by Chamber of Commerce to Producers; Many Advantages Listed

AN open-house invitation has been extended to the production division of the motion picture industry by San Antonio, Texas Chamber of Commerce, the boosters of the city being positive that this is the place to make pictures economically amid conditions most encouraging and convenient.

San Antonio has been flirting with the film industry for some time, with the result that several companies have located their producing plants in the center of the great southwest where the cradle of Texas was first rocked in the world famous Alamo. The most prominent of these perhaps, is San Antonio Motion Picture Corporation producing pictures under the direction of Leopold Wharton with Macklyn Arbuckle, a native son of San Antonio, as star. The first release now ready for distribution is "Mr. Potter of Texas," adapted from the book by Archibald Gunter, who is author of "Mr. Barnes of New York" and other well known plays.

From the viewpoint of the film producer, San Antonio has many desirable qualifications. Climatically, this section of the country is ideal for all the year exterior work, as it has about three hundred days of sunshiny weather each year, according to records kept for the past several years by S. E. Cornelius of the city's Chamber of Commerce.

"The many natural attractions of our city make it a desirable place for film people to work because of the newness and wide variety of the scenes," John B. Carrington, secretary-manager of the Chamber of Commerce, told Motion Picture News representative. "Besides the Alamo and missions, which are as when first built, we have Fort Sam Houston, the headquarters of the southern division of the army, with wireless stations, supply depots, cavalry and very remarkable drill grounds. Camp Kelly, the aviation field, is but ten miles distant, Camp Traverse is just north of Fort Sam Houston, and Camp Bullis is another place of interest. Breckenridge Park, containing 200 acres, has every kind of a natural exterior view imaginable, and there are country clubs, rivers, mountains, and the Gulf is but a few hours ride away, while most water scenes can be secured at West End Lake or at Lake Wedina where there is a million dollar dam built for irrigation purposes. In addition, San Antonio has a number of other parks and pleasure places suitable for film producers' usage.

"Perhaps the most interesting features of the city to the maker of films will be the old Spanish and Mexican sections with early day cathedrals."

Dillon Joins Famous-Lasky

Edward Dillon, director, has joined the forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and has already been assigned to direct a forthcoming Irene Castle picture to be produced under the working title of "Miss Antique."

In point of service Mr. Dillon is one of the oldest members of the motion picture art.

Big Theatre Operator Plans House Seating 2,400

A. A. Spitz, who operates many theatres in Rhode Island and other New England centers, has procured the American Hall in Pawtucket, and will convert it into a moving picture house. The plans call for a seating capacity of 2,400. The cost will exceed a half million.

Mayer Banquets Visitors and Shows Film

"In Old Kentucky" has been completed and the screen version of Mr. Dazey's great stage success was shown to the guests present at a banquet held in the Astor Hotel, New York City, Wednesday night October 8 with Louis B. Mayer of Boston as host.

Although this may not be released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit until early December Mr. Mayer deemed the opportunity ripe to show it to the many leading exhibitors and exchange men gathered in New York City for the First National meeting.

It registered heavily with the delegates if the comments and cheers were any indication. After a most excellent repast and music by a special orchestra the picture was screened and afterwards Anita Stewart appeared in person and received an ovation.

Marshall Neilan, the director of the picture, who was absent in the west, also received three cheers for his masterly work.

Calgary Exchange Managers in Elective Session

The third annual meeting of the Calgary branch of the Film Exchange Managers' Association was recently held and officers elected.

The election resulted in George Kohn of the Universal Film Company, Limited, becoming president; Norman Smith, of the Specialty Film Company, vice-president and B. Ginsberg was appointed solicitor and secretary.

Robertson-Cole's Expansion Outlined

A. S. Kirkpatrick, Able Film Man, is Named Vice-President and General Manager; Announces the Managing Personnel of Twenty-Six Branches

A. S. KIRKPATRICK, Vice-President and General Manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, has announced the managing personnel of the twenty-six Robertson-Cole branch offices throughout the United States and declares that the new system of direct release to the exhibitor inaugurated by Robertson-Cole this week is now in full swing. Scores of exhibitors throughout the country, many of them owners and managers of leading first run houses, have wired congratulations to the branch and the home office, and selections for branch managers seem to have met with popular approval.

The appointment of A. S. Kirkpatrick as vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation should prove a welcome bit of news to the trade and his friends generally throughout the United States.

Exchange Line-up

Mr. Kirkpatrick will direct and supervise the activities of the twenty-six exchanges located in the principal cities of the country. No more capable nor popular executive may be mentioned than the general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

Assisting Mr. Kirkpatrick as field manager is Joe L. Merrick, who has been identified with the industry for several years and who is known to exhibitors throughout the country. He has just completed a tour of the United States as a traveling representative for Roberston-Cole. The three exchange supervisors are O. R. Hansen, Newton E. Levi and Fred G. Sliter, all men of long experience in exhibiting as well as distributing.

"Right from the beginning the entire organization is going to work for what I consider the ideal relation between exhibitor and distributor," Mr. Kirkpatrick said when interviewed, "we want our exhibitor clientele established on the basis of business partners in the firm of Robertson-Cole and no effort will be spared to make them feel that they are partners and that the policy of live and let live so that all may prosper, is the dominating principle of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

"Every branch manager and every man under him is imbued with the idea that we are not selling pictures to the exhibitor, but for the exhibitor. No man is going out to bring about the sale of a single picture at a high price or at a low price. The selling of a single picture is not important. What we want is not a great many scattered sales but we want a customer clientele of men who believe in our products and who can always make money with our productions.

"If we want to make regular customers we must make regular customers on our productions for the exhibitor. We must put out productions that will by their compelling merit create the desire to see every additional picture coming from the same source. The one big thing to remember in the motion picture business is that when the exhibitor loses money the producer must ultimately lose it. If we can make a customer prosperous we can make ourselves prosperous. If we do not help him to prosper we strangle our own chance of making money. Every man in the field knows this and must be guided by it.

"We do not propose to begin helping the exhibitor when he signs the contract, we do not propose to jump out then and shout exploitation and tell him to let us show him how to put it over. He will get the necessary information from us, to be sure,—the knowledge of what the picture is and of its selling points—but our prime help to the exhibitor is going to begin with the production of the picture.

"The great artistic necessities of making a motion picture, the demand for better and better pictures, will be kept ever in mind, but the main idea is, the profit of the exhibitor and our consequent profit will be kept ever in the minds of the scenario editors, the directors, and the stars. Nothing will be permitted to interfere with the big idea of the motion picture business, the making of decent profits for the exhibitor and for ourselves.

"With the money-making picture an accomplished fact the most important factor is the establishment of the exhibitor as a business associate. Then is the time for mutual help in making that picture bring the biggest possible returns for both the exhibitor and the producer, and in the distributing organization the responsibility for doing this in an equitable and fair way rests.

"No industry can survive if any particular division of the industry plays the hog. The distributor cannot gouge the exhibitor and expect not to suffer from the reaction which affects the entire industry. On the same theory the exhibitor cannot compel the distributor and producer to operate without profit and not expect to suffer from a poor quality of product.

"This is a plain and frank statement of what we consider the basis of the fair deal. If a realization of the fact that it is the fair deal and that it means a square break for everyone should not dictate the wisdom of this policy—a desire for steady profits, substantial business—then common sense should.

"In brief it is an undeniable fact, recognized by all who are in the motion picture business to stay, who are in it to build sturdy business organizations, that producers and exhibitors will flourish as long as the exhibitor's prosperity endures. Weaken your exhibitor and you weaken yourself and the entire industry. Therefore we are dedicated to the policy of strengthening the exhibitor in every possible way, of utilizing his strength as a business partner in our enterprise, and in that way of making for success for the firm of Robertson-Cole."

The following is the list of branch offices and the managers who have been selected:

Albany, Jerome Safron; Atlanta R. A. Davis; Boston F. F. Kimmerle; Buffalo, E. J. Hayes; Chicago, Max Levey; Cincinnati, Charles Cassinave; Cleveland, W. W. Kulp; Dallas, R. C. Herman; Denver, H. D. Cassidy; Detroit, C. J. DeBute; Indianapolis, C. W. Tyler; Kansas City, E. McEvoy; Los Angeles, A. R. Patton; Milwaukee, L. J. Klar; Minneapolis, I. F. Mantzke; New Orleans, Al Doring; New York, Felix Goldfarb; Oklahoma City T. R. Richards; Omaha, G. Tilton; Philadelphia, J. F. Gill; Pittsburgh, George Moore; Portland, Theo. Johnson; San Francisco, W. A. Crank; St. Louis, Fred. A. Keller; Seattle, L. Wingham; Washington, E. L. McShane.

The establishment of the Robertson-Cole branch offices came close upon the announcement of a brilliant schedule of releases for the coming month and the industry was therefore somewhat startled to learn that a still greater schedule is in preparation. The big schedule previously announced is now admitted by Robertson-Cole officials to have been preliminary to a series of announcements calculated to cause some surprise among exhibitors and producers.

NEWS' CHICAGO OFFICE

Will Hight Resigns and is Succeeded by L. H. Mason

WILL M. HIGHT, Chicago representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has resigned his office to care for his private enterprises, and is succeeded by LeMear H. Mason, well known Chicago newspaper man and trade journal editor.

Mr. Mason has lately occupied an editorial desk on the Chicago American. Formerly he was managing editor of the American Coal Journal in Chicago, and prior to that held responsible editorial positions on the Denver Rocky Mountain News and for some years on the San Francisco Chronicle. As an officer of the Newspapermen's Club of San Francisco, Mr. Mason was one of the best known and most popular members of the Fourth Estate on the Coast, and is equally well known in Chicago.

Advertisers' Assn. Sees Exhibit

Mr. Levey of Screen Advertisers Association Demonstrates the Value of Film as Exploiting Medium

Nearly 10,000 advertising men of America were impressed with the showing of the Screen Advertisers' Association at the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, just closed at New Orleans.

The Screen Advertisers', under the direction of Harry Levey, president of the Association, offered one of the most interesting exhibits of the convention. Advertising men, accustomed to the exploitation of ideas by means of the printed word, were surprised to discover that another important medium of expression had come into existence in the last two years. That it held a value, and that others had appreciated its value, was made apparent in the number of motion picture advertising campaigns which were detailed in the exhibit of the screen people.

One of the most attractive rooms in the Hotel Grunewald, convention headquarters, was reserved by Mr. Levey for use by the screen association, and delegates to the convention were entertained every day with complete programs of industrial motion pictures which had been made the object of national and sectional campaigns. In his effort to place before this supercritical audience something out of the ordinary rut of advertising methods, Mr. Levey arranged a program of strikingly interesting pictures, each of which exemplified a type of advertising campaign which may be undertaken by means of the films.

One of the most interesting features of the screen association's activities in New Orleans, was the presentation to the executive committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, of a special film called "Down Through the Ages". This was a chronology of the science of advertising from the time of the Stone Age to the present day. It traced the development of this science from the day that the man of the Stone Age carved his message in stone, and placed it where the populace might read as it passed, to the present, when advertising occupies the center of the business stage as its most important factor.

Interesting features of this film showed the development of the printing press, the invention of metal type, and other important elements which have today reached a perfection of development. The film was heartily approved by a committee of five headed by Vice President Llewellyn Pratt, who urged that it be placed at the disposal of the advertising clubs of the nation as a stimulus to concerted action against labor unrest and the eternal controversy between Capital and Labor.

Sunday Opening is Jersey Topic

Picture Men Pushing Endeavors for Passage of Measure allowing Communities to have Self-decision

WITH the New Jersey State primaries out of the way, motion picture men are concentrating on the effort to secure legislation permitting Sunday exhibition of photo-plays and reports received at the New York headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry indicate that in all probability the New Jersey State legislature at its next session will pass an enabling measure to permit voting in the various communities on the question.

A law of this character has been urged for the past few legislative sessions in New Jersey and has each time passed the Assembly, only to be killed in the Senate. It is common knowledge that the great majority of the people of the state favor Sunday opening of movies and organized labor is on record as lending support.

The Exhibitors League of New Jersey, which with the backing of the National Association has worked tirelessly for the bill, is convinced that in the present time of social and industrial unrest those men who have in the past obstructed the measure will this year realize the danger of maintaining a senseless restriction upon one of the most potent recreational agencies the masses of the people now enjoy.

The New Jersey primaries, held yesterday, clear the decks for prompt action. A conference at Trenton between Dr. H. Charles Hespe of the New Jersey Exhibitors and certain influential Republican leaders in state politics, including ex-Governor Stokes, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, has resulted in these influential citizens coming out flatly for the proposed bill. Democratic leaders are already openly committed to the plan. So that it is not at all unlikely that one or both parties will incorporate a recommendation of a Sunday opening enabling measure as a party platform plank.

Much of the opposition to the measure, its champions assert, has been due to misapprehension concerning its provisions. It is believed by many of its opponents that it is a wide-open, compulsory measure, whereas the salient feature of the suggested law is its referendum quality.

In states which have adopted such a law not only has it been enacted in response to a clearly expressed desire on the part of voters, but the results of the plan where adopted prove that the benefits derived therefrom outweigh greatly the supposed evils. In the case of New York State, which passed an enabling law during the last legislative session, a noticeable falling off in crime in those communities which passed ordinances permitting Sunday opening under the State law was observed. Connecticut, another State which enacted a Sunday opening referendum law, passed the bill twice over the veto of the Governor.

Midnorthwest Exhibitors Pay Visit to New York

Among the influx of exhibitors in New York City for the last few weeks were several from Minnesota and vicinity.

Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben, owners of a large string of theatres in the Twin Cities were here as was Thomas Saxe of the Saxe Amusement Company, owners of many leading Milwaukee houses.

They all report business as excellent. These three gentlemen jointly own the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Wisconsin, Minnesota and the two Daktoas and their exchange manager J. Fred Cubberly was also present and stated that business was jumping ahead in leaps and bounds.

J. B. Clinton, owner of the Strand and Sunbeam theatres in Duluth was another New York visitor and he has just secured a new site for another down town house. Mr. Clinton has his new theatre in West Duluth nearly completed and it will have 1,000 seats. He believes in "pictures, not orchestras" and says that business is great.

D. W. Chamberlain was another caller from this section. He owns two suburban theatres in Minneapolis, one down town theatre in Fargo, one in Mankato and two in Faribault. Mr. Chamberlain is one of the oldest exhibitors, in point of active service, in that section.

Ascher Bros. Buy Ground for Another Chicago Theatre

Chicago will soon have another new cinema theatre of the highest grade representing a total investment of $1,850,000. The property at 110 to 122 North State Street, fronting 91.05 feet on State Street with a depth of 90.3 feet, has been purchased by Ascher Brothers from the Estate of Marshall Field for $1,133,000 cash, upon which they will construct a theatre to cost around $700,000. B. W. Eisendrath and David S. Simon represented the purchasers and Dibblee & Manierre represented the Field Estate.

News Items of Interest

Property has been bought by Marcus Loew on Bay Ridge avenue, and Fifth street, Brooklyn, on which he will build a motion picture theatre, seating 2,700 people. The cost is estimated at $500,000.

The attendance at the Allentown picture houses remains normal despite the enforced increase in admission rates. However, their patrons have become more exacting as to the quality of the productions that are to be exhibited.

The Women's War Relief Series was started at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, and next given a run at the Palace. Reviews of the first two exhibits were very favorable, and some of the larger picture houses in Philadelphia have booked them.

The Opera House at Hanover, Pa., will be reopened after a long period of closed doors. David S. Newcomer says both motion pictures and road-shows will be sbown.

Isaac Marcus of the National Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., announces that the seating capacity of his house has been increased from 700 to 1,400 at a cost of $1,500.

The New Colonnade Theatre in Millersburg, Pa., opened August 29 with "The Heart Of Humanity." Mr. L. G. Holtzman built the new house and will conduct its management.

Plans are under way to increase the seating capacity of the Carroll Theatre, East End, Cincinnati, from 350 to 800 chairs.

Al Lichtman, distributing manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has promised Cincinnati three more photoplay theatres with a capacity of from 3,000 to 4,000.

Tbe annual "Billy Hart Night," instituted by the B. P. O. Elks Lodge, No. 1, has been extended to two nights. The proceeds of the last two performances on the 29 and 30 of September were for the benefit of the tuberculosis soldiers at Otisville, N. Y., and for the vocational training fund for disabled soldiers, sailors and marines. At both performances two motion pictures were shown, "The Way Back" and "The Spirit of Elkdom."

Blumenfeld and Knox of the Empire Theatre, Napa, Cal., have completed plans for the erection of their new theatre in Napa. The new house will be an up-to-date structure with a 25-foot stage and a seating capacity of 1,400. The estimated cost will be $58,000.

Among the new incorporations of the State of Obio are included: The Olympic Amusement Company, of Cleveland, incorporated for $5,000 by Mr. and Mrs F. H. Jackson; and the Dramatic Feature Film Company, also of Cleveland, incorporated for $35,000 by Geo. Q. Kelly and A. M. Kelly.

Sherman Manchester has resigned from his position as secretary of the Board of Motion Pictures Exchange Managers of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Manchester will become allied with the Select Pictures Corporation in New York.

The Shea Amusement Company of Buffalo has purcbased property at 622–4–6 Main street for tbe site of the new metropolitan theatre The new theatre, according to reports, will have 250 seats more than the Capitol in New York and will he the largest theatre of its kind in the world.

Samuel Bomes of Providence, R. I., is planning to erect a new theatre to be known as "The Little Playhouse," which will have a seating capacity of about 1,000.

The Rialto Theatre opened in Providence, R. I., with "The Brat" on Monday, October 13. The new house seats 1,500 persons and has an $18,000 pipe organ.

Owing to the need for additional space, the Los Angeles office of the Sunlight Arc Company has been moved from its former location in the Wright & Callender Building to 1,735 Highland avenue, Hollywood.

Britton Puhlishing Company has sold the photoplay producing rights to "Jenny Be Good" to the producers of the "Mircale Man." The author of "Jenny Be Good" is Wilber Finley Fauley.

Screen Ads Issue in Cleveland

Exhibitors Contend They Should Have a Share in Advertising Films and that "Slip-ins" Negate Their Local Arrangement

THE Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitor's Association is in the midst of a lively fight with several of the leading producers, anent advertising films, which are being interpolated into feature productions, and for which the exhibitor is reaping no profit. The exhibitors contend that they are entitled to a share of all profits from advertising films, whether straight or camouflaged, and that they will henceforth refuse to lend their screens for such use, free of charge.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association is founded on the now well-known C. and P. plan of organization. This is the plan which originated with Mr. Herrington of Pittsburgh, and Sam Bullock of Cleveland, whereby membership to the organization is obtained by donating a screen for a short reel of advertising matter at every performance for one year. This is equivalent to an annual fee of fifty dollars. Exhibitors who are unwilling to show any advertising matter on their screen may become members of the association upon the annual payment of the fifty dollars.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association sells a minimum of one hundred screens for one year to any national advertiser. All profits belong to the association. Practically every exhibitor in the territory has been willing to give three or four minutes of his program to this matter, and now the membership of the organization includes almost every motion picture exhibitor in the northern section of Ohio.

This business enterprise of the Exhibitors Association resents any disposition on the part of the producer, to have him run any reels of an advertising nature, without sharing the profits that arise from such advertisements.

And Sam Bullock, secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, has sent out a circular letter to every exhibitor in the territory, asking him to beware of camouflaged advertisements, and requesting him not to run any films of such nature.

Many exhibitors have never known that they were showing advertisements in their features, until Mr. Bullock pointed out no less than five distinct ads in one of the recent feature photoplays.

"Checkers" Continues Favorite

Country-wide Reports Show That Fox's Racing Special Remains Good Bet at Box-Office

PLAYING "Checkers" has become the favorite indoor and outdoor sport of hundreds of leading theatre men since the release of the William Fox screen production of that name, founded on the great Henry M. Blossom stage success and first introduced to the public at the Central Theatre in New York.

According to reports, the daily mail at the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation has grown to an unprecedented extent. It comes from theatre owners and managers all over the country, praising "Checkers" and applying for either original bookings or return dates on the feature. And the mail is supplemented with night letters by wire and rush telegrams. The popularity of the production is not confined to any one zone or territory, but extends, it is said, from coast to coast, and from Canada to the Gulf.

Fred M. Taylor, of Taylor's Academy of Music at Newburgh, N. Y., has been reported as the one who has achieved the greatest comparative success with "Checkers." He has played it three times and still is as enthusiastic as he was with the first showing. After playing it for three days continuous run Mr. Taylor was beseiged by his patronage to bring "Checkers" back — which he did.

Jumping from the Empire State out into Toledo, Ohio, in the territory of the Fox exchange at Cleveland, the business on the showing of "Checkers" has been said to have made records previously unknown.

Following its successes in Cleveland, Lorraine, Dayton and other Ohio cities, comes a wire from Mr. A. Horwitz, of the Colonial Theatre in Toledo, who states:

"Just closed first week showing of 'Checkers,' breaking all house records. Everyone raving about picture."

Not least important in connection with the demand of the theatre men for "Checkers" is the fact that in many cases the highest prices ever paid for a picture of this class are said to have been bid voluntarily for the film — so great seems the confidence created in the minds of the showmen in the drawing power of the racing play.

Newest Stanley Theatre to Cost a Million

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America announces that the Hoffman-Henon Company, architects, have been awarded the contract for the new Stanley theatre to be built at 19th and Market streets, Philadelphia, to the Keystone State Construction Company at a cost of $1,000,000.

The theatre will occupy a space of 145 feet on Market street and 176 feet on 19th street. Provisions will be made for a subway entrance to the theatre.

Special Exchange Representative

Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces the appointment of Hunter Bennett as Special Representative to Famous Players-Lasky exchanges.

Five New Robertson-Cole Films

Magnitude of Productions and the Names of Stars Indicate the Scope of Plans for the Coming Year

AN indication of the extent of the Robertson-Cole plant for the coming year is given in the announcement of five new pictures which have either been released in the past few weeks or will be released in the immediate future. According to an official of the company these five pictures represent the calibre of all Robertson-Cole future releases and is fulfilment of the pledge made to exhibitors to release only such pictures as pass the requirements of the Robertson-Cole Reviewing Committee.

The star and special series cover a wide and popular appeal and in the specials one of the finest of Maurice Tourneur's productions, "The Broken Butterfly" has been purchased. Critics familiar with the work of Mr. Tourneur who have seen this picture are authority for the statement that it is one of his best and is certain to be a tremendous success with the public.

Another picture of extraordinary merit is "The Open Door" produced for Robertson-Cole by the Artclass Pictures Corporation under the supervision of George V. Merrick It was described by critics who attend the pre-release showing as the 100 per cent motion picture, perfect in every requirement of a real mystery play.

The story involves four men as murder suspects and throughout the five reels the tension is held at a high point. The mystery is utterly insoluble until the very last few minutes of the play when the real slayer is uncovered.

Noted among the popular favorites is Sessue Hayakawa who is seen in the role of a Japanese Prince in E. Phillips Oppenheim's story "The Illustrious Prince." No more absorbing tale has been written in years than this tale of intrigue set in London society.

Fine clothes do not always cloak refinement and that is the fact established in "Poor Relations." In a series of appealing episodes the ideals and aspirations of two families are deftly contrasted and depicted; and interwoven is a charming love story. Every element reflects the s and in its homely humor an audience will after viewing it, so it is believed, have a better and kindlier perspective of human nature.

H. B. Warner who has steadily forged to the van of favorites has a splendid and popular vehicle in the comedy, "A Fugitive from Matrimony." In this play Mr. Warner is at last given full scope to display his distinctive talents in an all round American subject.

Advertisers' Dinner a Success

Well Attended By Ad and Press Representatives and Picture Notables; New Officers Elected

THE Cafe Boulevard was the scene of a highly enthusiastic and happy festive gathering on last Friday evening, Oct. 10. The occasion of the jollification was the dinner of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers Inc., and the event marked the turning out of a most representative body of "poster daubers" and "ink spillers" whose task it is to keep the public informed of the latest developments in the celluloid world.

The assembly, be it known to their credit, did not spend the entire evening at simply satisfying the demands of the inner-man, but mixed business with pleasure in a most enjoyable manner. The opportunity was taken to install the new officers of the association for the coming term. The successful candidates elected were the following:

President Paul Gulick of the Universal; Vice-President, Paul M. Lazar of the United Artists; Secretary, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Treasurer, C. L. Yearsley of the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Harry Reichenbank officiated as master of ceremonies at the banquetboard and acquitted himself to the satisfaction of those present. In addition to the other features that had been secured for the amusement of the diners, Messrs. Rice and Ryan did a little artistic turn and entertained the gathering by drawing a series of sketches depicting some of the popular motion picture stars and also some of the best known gentlemen in the dining room.

Seated around the festive board were found among many others: Arthur Leslie, Charles E. Hastings, Capt. James M Loghborough, "Randy" Lewis, "Joe" Reddy, "Vic" Shapiro and Harry Lewis.

E. H. Hibben to Present Novel Series of Scenics

E. H. Hibben, until recently technical expert for the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation of New York, was compelled to sever his connection with that firm and go West to regain his health after a breakdown due to over-work.

Mr. Hibben now claims to have an original and novel idea of presenting his "Scenics." The first of the series will be entitled, "A Long Way From Broadway" and the second will be "The Kiddies' Dream of Wonderland." Both will be released as one-reelers at an early date. The printing and developing of these pictures will be done at the laboratory of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. of Chicago.

Confusion in Personalities

A photograph published in the last issue of Motion Picture News owing to a confusion in captioning, purported to show President Albert E. Smith standing with George A. Smith of the London office. In reality the second man in the photograph was John Pearson, London manager of Vitagraph.

CAMOUFLAGE

Dressing Up Old Pictures to Pass as New is Unhealthy

THE fight which William S. Hart successfully waged against the distribution of his pictures under new titles, as new productions, has again borne fruit in a drastic decision by the Federal Trade Commission. It will be recalled that the Commission recently issued an order against the reshowing of complete old films under new names, without clearly showing that they were old films retitled.

Now the Federal Trade Commission has just declared that exhibiting to the public under new names motion pictures containing parts of pictures previously shown, without, "Clearly, distinctively, definitely and unmistakably" showing, both in the films themselves and in the advertising of them, that they are composed in whole or in part of old films, is an unfair method of competition in violation of law.

Films Aid in Campaign on Fire Prevention

Motion picture films are to be used to help put out America's preventable fires, in a nation-wide educational campaign which started on Fire Prevention day, October 9.

The first picture of the fire prevention film series is now being produced under the personal supervision of Harry Levey, managing director of the Universal Industrial Department.

The films will not be sermons on celluloid, full of "don'ts." Each film will have a cracking good plot which would make it desirable for showing in the regular theatres even if it did not contain a message vital to the public welfare which every public spirited theatre owner will be glad to help disseminate. They will show the causes of needless fires. They will teach what to do while the fire department is coming. They will deal with extinguishing apparatus. They will show the importance of putting fire-retarding material into a building.

The series will include general fire prevention films and special films adapted to the peculiar needs of the sections in which they are shown — rural districts, in timber country and in cities.

Historical Film Co. Will Release Bible Film

The Historical Film Company of America, on or about January 1st, is going to release to the Exhibitors of America, through a large distributing organization, the Holy Bible in 52 two reel episodes, starting with Genesis and ending with the Ascension of Christ.

These pictures are non-sectarian and are being produced upon an elaborate scale at a cost far exceeding the average feature. On account of its wide appeal you will have no difficulty in co-operating with the ministers of your city. We feel that these pictures will lend dignity to any program and tend to satisfy to a great extent the present world movement for better films.

Cohen Gently Replies to Frank Rembusch

The following reply has been sent by Sydney Cohen, of the M. P. E. L. of New York to the open letter addressed to him by Frank Rembusch. The contents are self-explanatory:

"Thanks for your communication in which you speak of the need of united action by the exhibitors. By reading an account of our activities in Washington you will see that we have been singularly fortunate in anticipating your wishes.

"I note with special interest what you say about the tropical heat at St. Louis which clouded the deliberations and impeded the action of the recent meeting at St. Louis and I also note your hope for a good supply of breezes at Ocean View next summer, 'though I am not as sanguine as you are. I heartily agree with you that exhibitors conventions should only be held under the very best climatic conditions. Indeed, I think it would be a wise step to appoint a committee with yourself as Chairman to get in touch with the United States Weather Bureau which, no doubt, will give you valuable suggestions.

"I hope you will take the trouble to read the brief we have submitted to Chairman Fordney of the Ways and Means Committee and Representative Kahn relative to our plea for the screen as an educational medium. I know you have always been an earnest advocate of this idea both in and out of Shelbyville.

"You will be pleased to learn that same has received the commendation of these gentlemen, also Dr. Claxton the Chairman of the Board of Education for the United States."

Arrest of Exhibitor Opens Sunday Fight in Ohio

The fight for Sunday pictures shows is on again in Ohio. It broke out last week when Harry W. Kress, president of the Picqua Amusement Company of Picqua, Ohio, was arrested on complaint of two of the leading ministers of the town, for running picture shows on Sunday.

The fight has resolved itself into an altercation between the Ministerial Association of Picqua, and the Central Trades Union. The Central Trades Union recently passed a resolution, requesting motion picture exhibitors to keep open Sunday afternoons. To this the ministers are opposed, and although the pictures shown at Mr. Kress' houses were all of high moral calibre, complaint was filed against him, and his arrest was made. He was released, however, upon his own recognizance.

Mr. Kress has declared that he will fight the Sunday issue to a finish. He has already arranged to duplicate in court the identical show presented at his theatre at the time of the arrest, showing that there was nothing in the program to which the ministers could take offense.

Eddie Eckles Goes to Coast

Eddie Eckles, newly appointed general manager of Capital Film, left Chicago last week for Los Angeles to make a study of the production situation.

Home Product Gaining Abroad

American Producers May Have to to Content Selves with an Even Break on Distribution; New Concern Rumor

THE following interesting sidelights on the feeling, allegedly rife in England to ward American picture product, are reported by the English correspondent of the News, G. M. Jeffries, following late observation:

"I called on the editor of a well-known cinema publication this side, and he was kind enough to show me several letters from his readers.

"Don't cut out American pictures, altogether," they say, "we like to see them, just as well as English films."

"This is correct, the British public do like the American pictures. They like the scenery, glimpses of New York, the West, the long rolling prairie, the snow-capped mountains, the huge ranches, and many other types of scenery that of course cannot be seen in this country.

"On the other hand — I saw, the same morning as it happened, the editor of a weekly periodical which includes a film page in every issue. He told me that he wanted news of British films, British artists. So far so, in fact, that he himself thought of visiting a studio each week in order to get the news.

"Summing this up, it seems to me that in future the programme of the British Cinema will be equally divided between British and American films.

"This will mean a considerable difference to American exports to this country. Instead of 95% of the films now shown being made over the water, only 50% will be the future percentage. Thus approximately exports will be cut off 45%.

"Therefore it is up to the producer your side to study the British market. Remember Famous-Players have realised this, and not satisfied with studying the market, have actually come over here to produce.

"As to what success they will have remains to be seen, but I have already sent the view of the majority of exhibitors this side, and it does not need repetition.

"I would refer to Mr. W. A. Brady's words, when he predicted the costume play as the future market. He is right as far as the market here is concerned. The British public are extremely fond of the romantic costume play. No British films had greater successes here than 'Rupert of Hentzau' and 'Prisoner of Zenda.'

"There are plenty of authors this side that the producer could draw on, namely, Halliwell Sutcliffe, May Wynne, Marjorie Bowen, Geoffrey Farnol, and many others, all of whom write the romantic novel.

"Some films to be released shortly, if I may mention them without incurring displeasure on rival producers, which are simply bound to be successes are: 'Tarzan of the Apes' and the sequel, 'Fabiola' (an Italian film — but costume) and 'Salome.'

"Apropos of costume plays, a certain British company this side are taking Charles Kingsley's 'Westward Ho.' Peculiarly enough I spent my vacation at 'Westward Ho' only three weeks ago, and therefore I can state as an actual fact that scenery can be secured there as good as in any other part of the world.

"It may interest Americans to know that the town of Westward Ho was named after the book.

"Advance news has reached me of a proposed combine of British producing firms, with a capital of $2,500,000. I shall send further particulars of this in due course.

"Miss Eve Unsell, scenarist, from your side, is receiving plenty of publicity in her capacity of scenarist to the British F. P. L. Co., her name in connection with scenarios appearing twice in the latest issue of 'Tit Bits.' Miss Unsell says the British F. P.-L. Co. are going to encourage British scenarists." — G. M. Jeffries.

Publicity Campaign on Chaplin

Victor Kremer Plans an Extensive Exploitation for Chaplin's "Burlesque on Carmen"

VICTOR KREMER, who will present Charlie Chaplin in "A Burlesque on Carmen" on Broadway in conjunction with The Spanish Dancing Girls, is preparing an extensive publicity and advertising campaign for his production. The campaign, which will be worked out under the direction of Bert Ennis, is reported to be two edged in purpose, being designed not only for the use of buyers of state rights for "Carmen," but also for use in exploiting the offering as a touring theatrical attraction. Kremer has already disposed of several territories and is holding a large portion of the United States for the purpose of sending out traveling companies, which will present "Carmen" with the Spanish Girls' Dance Revue, under the personal direction of his various offices in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. Special attention is now being given to the details of the New York opening, which is scheduled to occur around the middle of November, according to present plans.

In order that the advertising accessories and the publicity campaign may be used both for straight bookings and also for the road companies, a theatrical atmosphere will be introduced in special sets of the lithographs, posters, slides, lobby displays, etc., by using photographs and special illustrations of the Dancing Girls, the Jazz Band, and other elements of the traveling attraction.

A press sheet will also be issued, together with several novelties, among which will be a cut-out of a bull-fighting contest, a series of "teaser" cards bearing the photographs of the dancing girls, and an original window card which will take the place in many instances of the regular one-sheet star poster of Chaplin.

According to statements made the supplies and advertising material for "Carmen" will be new in every respect, and the production will be handled from this angle by Kremer as if it were a new release of the famous comedian.

Items of Interest

Peggy Hyland, the celebrated English actress, is at work on her next Fox picture under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell, a comedy drama with the working title of "Auld Lang Syne." The story contains opportunity for some very prettly character work for the actress. She first is seen as a shepherdess and later in a love episode of an appealing nature. The star and her director have just completed "A Girl in Bohemia."

Helen Chadwick who is playing the heroine in the Goldwyn production of "The Cup of Fury," had the honor, the latter part of September, of christening an 8,800 ton vessel launched at San Pedro for the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The launching is to form a conspicuous part of the picture which is being directed by T. Hayes Hunter and the entire cast of the photoplay participated in the launching ceremonies which were held in the Southwestern Ship Yards at San Pedro. As the result of arrangements made with the shipbuilders, the action of the story was worked into the actual launching, and Miss Chadwick, standing on the launching platform, broke a bottle of champagne over the ship's bows as it slid down into the waves. The craft which is to enter the new Merchant Marine, was named, "West Niger" a name chosen by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson during her recent visit to the Coast in company with the President.

In the filming of the "Far East," the Japanese story in which Earle Williams is playing a leading role, director Chester Bennett has engaged a staff of experts in order to insure the authenticity not only of the interior decorations, but of the exterior scenes supposed to be in Japan. These include a Japanese architect and interior decorator, and a landscape gardener, whose sole duty it is to select exterior locations that are a counterpart of Japanese topography.

Between October first of this year and January 1, 1921, Bessie Barriscale, according to the arrangements she has just outlined with Robertson-Cole interests, is scheduled to make eight superproductions of the same elaborate type of which "The Woman Michael Married," her recently completed picture, is a striking example. The star is declared to be one of the most busily engaged young persons in the picture industry. Her first of the new series of pictures, which, like the others, will be produced under the direction of her husband, Howard Hickman, will be built upon G. Judson's great story, "Beckoning Roads." Upon completion of the series Miss Barriscale and Mr. Hickman will start upon their trip around the world.

Frank R. Beall, Fox director, has just completed production of "The Devil's Riddle," a drama with Gladys Brockwell as his principal player. The story is a heavier one, it is said, than any which Mr. Beall has staged for the Fox Company and was one of many characterizations. The scenes ran from the wilds of Montana where the heroine experienced bitter poverty, by way of the stage, to fame and wealth as an artist's model in the Bohemian set of New York City. He has recently been assigned the direction of the co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair in their series of light comedy dramas for the Fox Company. His present production is a story by J. Anthony Roach, called "The Flash-In-The-Pan-Man," a story of the stage and of song writing.

The first of the emotional dramas which Scott Dunlap, the versatile Fox director, is producing with Madlaine Traverse as his star, is a sensational story entitled, "The Hell Ship." Dunlap recently returned to the Hollywood studio after a trip to San Francisco where he chartered a sailing vessel upon which most of the pictures will be made. The story is one with many scenes of mutiny and the burning of a vessel in the South Seas. The director recently has completed a series of comedy dramas extending over a period of six months in which he guided the screen destinies of Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.

On Tour to Establish Non-Theatrical Exchanges

David K. Niles, General Manager of the Non-Theatrical Distribution Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation left New York October 7th for a trip to Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago and other cities in the middle west, where he will personally supervise the establishment of non-theatrical distribution exchanges.

Charles Ray has commenced work at the Thomas H. Ince studio in Culver City, California, on a new picture, the story for which was written by Julien Josephson, who has provided many of Mr. Ray's vehicles that sparkle with quaint humor and delightfully homely episodes. In this new picture Mr. Ray will be surrounded by a large cast of well known screen artists, including Ann May, Norris Johnson, Gertrude Claire, William Courtwright, Gordon Mullen, Donald McDonald and Bert Woodruff.

Staff of Capitol Theatre is Announced; Opening Soon

The long expected announcement of the opening date and detailed policy of the new Capitol Theatre, towering on Broadway at 51st Street, may at last be said to be at hand, judging from an announcement made by Managing Director Edward Bowes that the executive staff is now complete and hard at work on the new enterprise. The roster as given out contains many names of interest.

The general management vests in Mr. Bowes, with the following executive heads assisting him in charge of the various departments:

Stage, Ned Wayburn, producing director; Scenic, John Wenger, art director; Motion Pictures, Hy Mayer, art editor; Thomas Walker, film editor; James Prangle, camera man.

Music, Arthur Pryor, musical director; Simone Mantia, concert master; Ernest F. Jores, organist; Robert Berentsen, assistant organist; Warren Shorts, librarian.

Auditorium, Charles Reis, house manager; Rivington M. Bisland, treasurer; Jerome L. Falconer, auditor; William J. O'Brien and Edward Berry, assistant house managers; Rae Prussak and Janet Prussak, assistant treasurers; Thomas Gavagan and Jack Conney, chief ushers.

Promotion, Ben H. Atwell, director of publicity; Bessie Mack, press representative; Abe Mass, assistant.

Amsterdam Opera House Leased as Studio by Lasky

Further increase of studio space, necessitated by the tremendous expansion of production work in the East, is announced by J. N. Naulty, General Manager of the Eastern Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has completed negotiations to lease the Amsterdam Opera House at 332–344 West 44th Street, near Ninth Avenue, for a period of one year, to be used as a studio.

The Amsterdam Opera House was formerly used as a rehearsal hall for many New York plays and musical comedies.

The hall proper has a tier of boxes around three walls and a raised platform in the fourth end. All these will be removed which will leave a stage of 70 by 100 feet, slightly larger than that of the Fifty-sixth Street Studio.

Hugh Ford, directing Elsie Ferguson in "His House in Order," and John S. Robertson, directing John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," will be the first to occupy the premises.

New Star for Cosmopolitan Productions

Lucy Cotton, favorite of the screen and stage, who appeared for two years in the Broadway success, "Turn to the Right," and scored last year in "Up in Mabel's Room," has been signed on a long-time contract with the International Film Company, to play in Cosmopolitan Productions, filmed after the stories of famous authors, the screen rights of which are owned by the Hearst publications.

Hall's Exchanges in Operation

Two Days Following Closing Deal for Exhibitors' Mutual Exchanges, Twenty-six Exchanges Operate Under Hallmark Management

FRANK G. HALL, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, after closing a deal involving nearly a million dollars, including the acquisition of the twenty-six exchanges throughout the United States operated by the Mutual Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, took possession on Saturday and the following Monday had this exchange system in complete operation under the Hallmark management with Hallmark's New York exchange, formerly located at 130 West 46th Street, moved into the new headquarters at 1600 Broadway, from which address Hallmark's New York exchange will operate in the future. Beginning Oct. 13, two days after the taking over the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges, Mr. Hall had every phase of the new system in full working order, with the physical distribution of all of Exhibitors' Mutual releases including all of Hallmark's releases, running through the same channels, distributing under the supervision of Hallmark management.

Some idea can be had of the big increase in business and the enormity of the increase in the number of reels of film handled under the new routine, when it is stated that in addition to the regular Hallmark list of releases, including a serial, there are twelve Chaplin-re-issued comedies releasing by arrangement with the Clark Cornelius Corporation, and all of the special releases formerly handled by Mutual Exhibitors, numbering more than fifty-two and representing distribution in every picture centre in the United States. This approximates an increase in physical distribution of film of more than 50 per cent and the handling of thousands of feet of additional reelage from each of the twenty-six exchanges operating throughout this country.

The increase in Mr. Hall's own productive activities during the past few months has in itself brought on a big increase in Hallmark's distributing branches. The Famous Directors' Pictures series, of which there will be twenty-six in all, three of which have been released since October 1st, "A Dangerous Affair," and "Love, Honor and (?)," Charles Miller productions, and "Wit Wins," a Burton L. King production, with a big special by J. Searl Dawley to follow next week.

In addition to these Mr. Hall has on the market his first serial production, "The Trail of the Octopus," starring Ben Wilson, seven episodes of which have been released. Following the release of the final episode of this serial, Mr. Hall has ready his second serial, "The Sign of the Rat," written, scenarioized and directed by Stuart Paton, with Clarie Anderson and Harry Carter in the principal rôles.

Advertising Representative of the News Marries

The many friends and acquaintances in the Los Angeles film colony of Arthur H. Shivers, the Southern California advertising representative of "The Motion Picture News," were agreeably surprised during the week of September 14th to learn of his quiet marriage on September 17th to Mrs. Genevieve W. Drabelle. The romance was one which had its inception during high school days. The popular advertising man enlisted in the United States Service soon after the United States entered the war and was renewed following his service with a second artillery regiment in this country and France. Mr. Shivers, for several years was associated with "The Motion Picture News," in the advertising field, under the direction of J. C. Jesson, its West Coast representative, and his widespread popularity was evidenced in the large number of congratulatory messages received following the announcement of the marriage.

"Desert Gold" Registers Hit

Oliver Kerhlein, owner of the Kinema, Fresno, Cal., reports that an exhibition of "Desert Gold" has drawn a record attendance to his house. This W. W. Hodkinson release was widely and thoroughly exploited by Mr. Kerhlein before its showing, and according to his reports his efforts were rewarded with complete success.

Technical Directors Organize and Define Qualifications

At last the Technical Director is to have a definite status in the motion picture industry. There has always been some uncertainty as to just what the name involved, but the real technical directors have at length decided to establishd definitely the qualifications necessary to fill such a position successfully.

The Technical Directors' Association was organized last week with an initial membership of approximately forty recognized men whose capabilities entitled them to admittance to the organization. No applications will be considered from prospective members unless they shall have received screen credit as technical director for at least one year and are able to plan and superintend the construction of all stage settings and scenic effects called for in the average script.

At a meeting held at the Assistant Directors' Hall, on last Thursday evening, the following were elected to office for the ensuing six months: President, R. H. McCray, Vitagraph; vice-president, R. E. Sibley, Vitagraph; secretary, E. Hartley, Universal; treasurer, Sidney Uhlman, Lasky; trustees, Edward Schulter, Metro; A. W. Alley, Universal; F. Brown, Metro; F. Stahlcup, Metro; sergeant-at-arms, John Alden; press representative, E. F. Olin, Lehrman and Arbuckle companies.

Criterion Film of Atlanta Secure Pioneer Features

The Pioneer has broken into the heart of the "Solid South" with the full line of feature productions and short subjects. The Criterion Film Service of Atlanta, controlling the States of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, has taken over all Pioneer Attractions for the six Southern States above named.

The negotiations which have been pending over a period of several weeks were terminated in the signing of a full contract by M. H. Hoffman, on behalf of the Pioneer and M. A. Lightman for the Criterion interests.

The productions which are acquired by the Criterion Film Service include the Facts and Follies Series, "The Boomerang" and "The Long Arm of Mannister," both of which have Henry B. Walthall as the featured player. "The Sins of the Children" with Stuart Holmes and Alma Hanlon, "The Girl From Nowhere" with Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas, "Virtuous Sinners" with Wanda Hawley, Grace Davison and Conway Tearle in "Atonement," and Grace Davison in "Suspicion" are also included in the list acquired by the Criterion Film Service.

Four Kinds of Comedians Listed by Noel Smith

"There are four kinds of comedies," says Noel Smith, director of Jimmy Aubrey, Babe Hardy and Dick Smith, on the Vitagraph program. 'These four kinds are: Light comedy, low comedy, funny comedies, and sad ones.' They are all hard to make, as proved by the latter variety.

"In the creation of comedies there are certain rules to be followed, but these rules are but the groundwork, and the structure that is erected upon them depends upon the ability of the director and the artistry of the star. It is like building a house — the rules of production are like a vacant lot — anyone can purchase or secure the foundation, but the creation of a substantial structure thereon requires the accumulated knowledge of specialists in that particular line"

When not actually engaged in the work of writing or directing, Noel Smith makes it a point to see every available comedy made by other directors, and he views each one with the critical eyes of a builder.

Mr. Smith is one of the youngest directors in the industry and the success that has already been his, proves the value of application and concentration.

"Impossible Catherine" Makes Hit in Broadway Houses

Ten Broadway houses have already played "Impossible Catherine" as first run bookings, the feature being but released on October 5th. The consensus of opinion of these theatre managers places the fact that "Impossible Catherine" is considered one of Virginia Pearson's best productions.

The theatres which have already booked "Impossible Catherine" are The 77th, Adelphi, Circle, New York, Symphony, Keystone, Olympia, Claremont, Washington and Bunny.

Japan's Picture Industry Still Unprogressive

The methods employed by exhibitors of Japan to attract their audiences, their methods of projecting the film, their utter disregard for all precautions against fire, and why they are not making money are interesting facts which Joseph R. Darling, representative at large of Fox Film Corporation, who has just returned from a two year's trip to the Far East, brought back with him from the island of Nippon. Of all the exhibitors using Fox features in the Far East the Japanese are the only ones who do not employ American methods to exploit their pictures.

The failure of the Japanese exhibitor to make money is due, according to Mr. Darling, to the extravagant lines on which the theatres are run and the prevailing spirit of the Japanese manager not to worry so much about his own program as about his rivals. A unique method employed by the Japanese exhibitor is that of damaging in every possible way the showings by his competitor.

American films are in great demand. The Japanese are quick to admit that their native productions are vastly inferior to American-made features.

First Three of Cuckoo Comics Ready for Release

Returning from Jacksonville, Fla., where he has been busy upon the supervision of forthcoming additions to the series of Cuckoo Comedies, the first three of which are already announced as ready for release, Mark M. Dintenfass reports that extensive constructional additions are in progress at the Dintenfass studios.

Work is now in hand, Mr. Dintenfass reports, on a Cuckoo Comedy that will have Turkey and in particular, Constantinople as its main location. Bobby Burns will be featured and his support will include Jobyna Ralston, May Louis and the Cuckoo beauty "chorus." An addition to the company is announced this week in the arrival at the Jacksonville studios of Anita Brown, comedienne, who earned distinction by her work in the Pathe, Fox and Metro film productions.

Last of the First National Program is Completed

The third and last production for First National Program "Heart of the Mountains," has been completed by Mary Pickford and producing organization, and during the past week was given a pre-release public tryout at the Strand Theatre, Pasadena, where the star, accompanied by her director, several of the producing organization, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chaplin, saw the effect of the picture upon the public.

Landy Opens Publicity Office

After two years spent in the publicity departments of Select and Realart, George Landy has now opened an independent publicity office in the Selwyn Theatre Building, at 229 West 42d Street.

Texas Guinan Signs Up With Oakley Super-Quality

Texas Guinan, whose characterizations of the western woman type has become popular among the movie fans, favoring the "wild and wooly" production, has signed a contract for an indefinite period with the Oakley Super-Quality Productions, Inc. Miss Guinan, who has been extensively exploited as the "female Bill Hart," will be seen in a series of western photodramas to be produced by Super-Quality for State rights release.

According to James W. Early, managing director of Super-Quality, Miss Guinan's first vehicle will be "Souls of Men," a six-reel offering of exceptional merit. She will play opposite Art Staton, who, according to Mr. Early, is a "find." Production on the "Souls of Men" has been started at the Super-Quality studios in Ebendale, Calif.

Work on "The Valley of the Shadow," a six-reel drama with a legal atmosphere, will be started shortly, featuring Yvonne Gardelle, formerly with Paramount.

Norma Talmadge Begins Work as First National Star

A statement has been sent out from Beulah Livingston, Miss Talmadge's director of publicity, that it has been definitely decided that "A Daughter of Two Worlds" from the book by LeRoy Scott, has been selected for Norma's debut as a First National star. Among the others selected to support the star are Frank Sheridan, Jack Crosby, Virginia Lee, E. J. Radcliffe, Winfreda Harris, "Billy" Shaw, Gilbert Rooney, William Slattery, "Ned" Burton and Joseph Smiley.

Motion Picture Advertisers Dine

The early Fall dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, postponed from October 3d, was held at the Cafe Boulevard New York, on Friday evening, October 10th. A plebiscite of members, certified by pre-release purchase of tickets, indicated a full house for the occasion, the entertainment committee reported. The dinner was followed by a special entertainment manned and officered by the members of the association, when a "superfeature" of mirth, merriment and magnitude was staged under the artistic direction of C. L. Yearsley, supervised by the whole body of the starring and supporting cast.

More Houses in Cincinnati Territory Increase Admissions

Indications are that the higher admission price movement has hit the Cincinnati district. First report of a definite decision to increase prices comes from the Hippodrome Theatre, Newport, Ky. (across the river from Cincinnati). I. Frankel, operating a chain of theatres, has decided to take the Hippodrome out of the six cent class — the last theatre of the price in Newport.

Another notice of higher admissions comes from the Pendrova Theatre, Lockland, Ohio, suburb of Cincinnati.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

"The Exhibitor Takes Many Chances"

By Eugene Roth

Managing Director — California Theatre — Los Angeles, Cal.

(This is a pessimistic article but its writer isn't a natural pessimist. He is a long headed experienced showman who has weathered the storms of an exhibiting career these many years. Therefore when he intimates that there are breakers ahead in the picture business, we may well give his opinions due consideration knowing that he has a reason for predicting "disaster" and that he is not a man who continually sees only the dark side of his profession.

Our selection of Mr. Roth's article for publication this week, as one of the series on "Admission Prices" is brought about largely because Mr. Roth has just arrived from the Golden Gate City, his home, and will spend some little time in New York, we presume for the purpose of making valiant efforts to keep the good ship "California Theatre" off the exhibiting rocks which he has sighted ahead, according to the opinions he has expressed in this article. Read what he says and give his words due thought. They are worth it.)

A very serious problem is now confronting the moving picture exhibitors throughout the entire country, and that is the matter of admission prices. Before the beginning of the present season the Managers in every territory were notified of a general increase of salaries in every department of the establishments. The moving picture operators, the musicians, janitors, stage hands, cashiers, ushers and other attaches, as well as supplies and advertising rates, this condition being occasioned by the acknowledged High Cost of Living and their claims were justified, because we must acknowledge that the employees could not stand the burden of the H. C. L. on the old salary basis, and their demands had to be met, with good grace. Results can only be obtained when the employees are satisfied and contented.

To meet this added increase in salaries it became necessary to advance the admission scale,—slightly—our former scale being:

MATINEES

Balcony	11c
Lower Floor	20c
Loges	25c
Boxes, Reserved	35c

Evening Prices Prevail on Sundays and Holidays. Federal Tax Included.

EVENINGS

Rear Section Balcony	17c
Center Section, Balcony	25c
Orchestra Seats	35c
Loges, Balc. & Lower Floor	50c
Boxes, (Reserved) Balcony and Lower Floor, Federal Tax Included	75c

And beginning September 1st, we increased the above to the following scale:

MATINEES

Balcony	15c
Lower Floor	25c
Loges	35c
Boxes Reserved	45c

Evening Prices Prevail on Sundays and Holidays. Federal War Tax Included.

EVENINGS

Rear Section Balcony	20c
Center Section Balcony	30c
Orchestra Seats	40c
Loges Balc. & Lower Floor	55c
Boxes (Reserved), Balcony and Lower Floor, Federal War Tax Included	85c

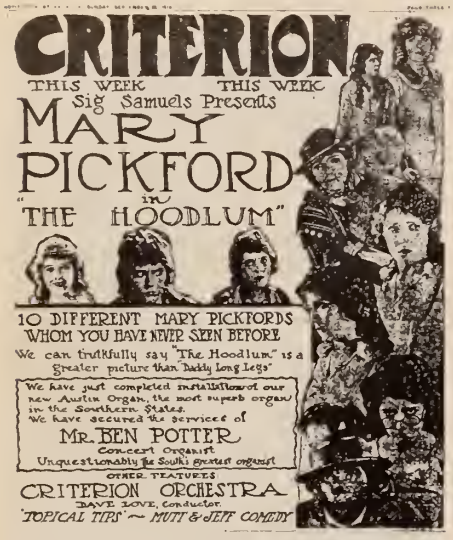
These new prices just about offset the natural overhead expenses, to which we were subjected.

The big problem now comes in. With once local conditions fairly met, the producers have started out for the coming season by asking terrific rentals for their products. How is this condition to be met? Surely we cannot again raise our prices! And, if we could, would it be advisable? I am inclined to think not. We must ever have in mind that the moving picture industry owes its unqualified success to the fact that it has given to the public a form of entertainment that is pleasing and educational, and at the same time,—within the allowance that the masses can afford to pay for, and if we get beyond the limit of what the masses generally can afford then we will reduce our possibilities and only cater to the classes, which are in the minority, and as such are surely unprofitable.

I am not blaming the producers who are actually spending huge sums in the making of pictures. On the contrary, I say we should encourage them, and if their results are successful they are justly entitled to the full value of their productions, but if, on the other hand, they spend huge amounts in an effort to make good pictures, and in the final analysis that picture has failed to develop up to their and the public expectations then I say it's wrong of them to try to pass the failure on to the exhibitor and make him pay for the failure.

The exhibitor takes many chances during the year even when he is fortunate in having a success as climatic conditions, coupled with the many unforescen local conditions, sometimes denies him the full box office returns, yet he alone suffers his losses, and can't pass them on. Then again, a great many producers are riding on the present crest of prosperity, and merely because some producers are justly getting rentals commensurate with the efforts, these other producers think it ripe for them to ride along and get theirs.

Eugene Roth, prominent San Francisco exhibitor, who is making New York a visit and who wrote this article exclusively for the NEWS.



Some pictures offered me recently at fabulous rentals were so utterly and absolutely unqualified and unmerited in values, that I can see disaster ahead unless this condition is immediately corrected. As a result of the above conditions we will positively take a stand against any concern attempting to kill or stifle the progress of the industry. I have spoken to a great many exhibitors of late, who are of the same opinions, and surely this will be the result of a concerted action unless honest commercial methods are immediately applied.

A number of qualified producers are now consistently releasing their products, and their sincere efforts to elevate the industry is being stifled by those who are in the game wholly and only for the immediate financial gain, without regard for true construction.

WE are always open for suggestions which will better this department and now that we have time to breathe in between times, from pounding out copy for our usual twenty odd pages each week, we will promise to give any ideas which you may have more than "the once over."

Your Idea and Ours

THE CRITERION of Atlanta, Ga., just missed framing a masterpiece in this display, a quarter page on Mary Pickford's latest feature, "The Hoodlum," and the reason that we say missed is that the hand lettering of the reading matter looks a trifle crowded, and also isn't worded any too well. In the grouping of the "ten different Mary Pickfords" the Criterion started with a bang up idea and has managed to evolve a cut that fully justifies the claim for the "ten."

If the Criterion had eliminated the "Whom you have never seen before" line which isn't necessary, also rather bad English, it would have gained enough space to relieve the display of the crowded appearance. The reading matter within the box could have been condensed somewhat, too, and is faulty in construction in that the words "organ" and "organist" are used too frequently.

This display we consider, however, to be valuable to this space in that the grouping of the Pickford stills is excellent and forms the basis of an ad that can be made both unusual and artistic by being a little more careful in the framing of the selling talk.

Lots of married people are danger signals for those who are single.

BOY, but they spend the money for advertising out in Seattle, Wash. Look at this display on "The Westerners." It was TWO PAGES in the Sunday Times of September 28th. The New York

Strand accorded this feature as much as an inch single column when it played the feature, which goes to show you the difference between Metropolitan advertising and what they do in the West.

Of course there is nothing so wonderful in this display which the Clemmer used for this picture except its size. However, you can bet that everybody who read the Times looked twice at this ad and made mental note of where and when the film was playing. A lot of exhibitors say they can't afford to buy big space, which, in some cities where the bars are pretty high, may be true, but if Seattle exhibitors can afford ads of this size week after week, then some of the other cities we know of that are using only a few inches can afford to go a whole lot stronger than they do now.

Tact is getting what you want without other folks knowing that you wanted it.

THE Colonial of Springfield decided to "get 'em in" for the first episode of "Smashing Barriers" and therefore bought this full page in the Springfield Sunday News to tell their patrons about the new production.

There is nothing artistic about this, but since it is big display on a serial we believe that this is the way to go after the business when you book a continued subject, so we are giving it space as an example of what to do and the way to do it on this sort of a production.

The scene cut on the right does not print up any too well, but aside from this we call this a good ad. Some might question the advisability of using so much space for the star's name, but we are of the opinion that in his particular field that Mr. Duncan has a distinct following and that with a large proportion of film fans his name stands for quality in rough and tumble screen acting and therefore this is to be commended.

THE Rivoli Theatre of Denver chose to "go it alone" when the time came to frame the displays for the engagement of "The Right to Happiness," the only producers' materials used being two stills of Miss Phillips as she appears in the two characters of the dual role.

We have seen larger displays on this feature and others that have been more than good, but nothing has come to us which to our mind registers any greater amount of "class" than this one. There is proper display, two excellent cuts and a good paragraph of selling talk. Franklin of Buffalo could with justice claim that Hyman of Denver, who is responsible for this display has again "borrowed" the orchestra pit idea which you will note at the bottom of the ad, but as both these managers are not only willing but anxious to help the other fellow, we feel sure that Buffalo is going to say to Denver: "Help yourself." In size this was three columns by eight inches.

Honesty is the best policy, but playing policy often leads to dishonesty

How Exhibitors Advertise

THEY are beginning to do some mighty good advertising in the South, and the Arcade Theatre of Jacksonville, Fla., is one of the leaders in this line. Here is a page in the Times-Union which advertised a double bill in the five-reel Marguerite Clark picture, "Widow by Proxy" and Arbuckles latest slap stick comedy "Back Stage."

The Arcade has been rather extravagant in its promises on both productions, yet this is perhaps justifiable and both pictures will undoubtedly please. There is a good cut of both stars and they have been correctly framed to get good effects. If all advertising was as good as this the picture business would be better than it is in many places. We might also call your attention to the fact that the Arcade is playing this bill a whole week, something even such cities as Buffalo and some of the down-town Pittsburg houses don't do as yet.

It looks like Jacksonville is a good picture town, which brings the next question as "Why?" Because Jacksonville has built up an interest in photoplay by advertising. And still some managers claim that it doesn't pay to go in for big advertising stunts and say that its the pictures which build business.

Misery dumps a lot of stones on the road to success.

THE REX has gone back quite a few years in its style of advertising "Checkers" in that it has adopted what used to be the regular thing in show business, picking out the "big moments" in a play and emphasizing them by a brief description. We imagine in the stage version of this racing drama this sort of advertising was common and we wouldn't say that in a melodrama where a lot of thrills are expected but what it is still good stuff. Anyway, the Rex gave this feature plenty of space, better than a quarter page, with the title in big display, and we should say that the result of its efforts should have been satisfactory. This isn't as large as some of the Seattle displays in the same issue of the Times from which this was clipped, but it attracted our attention and therefore it is safe to say that it did that of the other Times readers.

Babies are said to be the coupons of interest attached to the bonds of matrimony.

THE Majestic of Memphis, Tenn., is responsible for this display on Pauline Frederick in "Bonds of Love" and has evolved a very nice clean looking ad, built along orthodox lines. An excellent cut has been used which we conclude is from the producers since we have seen several displays using the same picture. The selling arguments are excellent. Light rule has been used to advantage, just enough to break up the glare of white space and give the display tone.

We have only one suggestion to make concerning this display and that is largely theory. We believe if a tall thin letter had been used on the display of the title which would have admitted of a little more leading between the star's name and the line mentioned that it would have relieved a somewhat crowded appearance that this portion of the display now has. However, this is mighty good work and is especially worthy of space in this section since it can be copied by many exhibitors as it is all type and cut work. In size this was three columns by fifteen inches.

HERE is a small one on Doug's latest "His Majesty the American," which the Strand of New Orleans used. You will note that the Strand ad man chooses to mention the fact that this is the first release of the "Big Four" combination by saying "Famous United Artists Corporation," which is another instance where an exhibitor has deliberately put "producer" into his advertising after we have all been yelling that the thing to do is to advertise our own business and have resented it when the producer put his trademark on the cuts he made for our use. Truly this is a business of contradictory ethics. One month they are howling against something and the next they are going out of their way to get something they formerly insisted they didn't want.

As for this two column eight inch display itself it is good. Nothing extraordinary, but up to the mark of the Saenger brand of publicity.

Shall the Newspaper Meet the Exhibitor at Least Half-way?

IF a city's motion picture houses do more advertising in the newspapers in six months than the legitimate houses do in five years shall the legitimate house have long reviews by the paper's dramatic critics gratis, and the movie house have a three line mention?

It is not true that in EVERY city in the United States the movie houses do more advertising in six months than the theatres do in five years, but it IS true that in every city the movies use many times the space taken by the legitimate houses.

It is not true that in every city the newspapers have their dramatic critics review the legitimate plays at great length and content the movies with a scant few lines, but it IS true that in every city the "reviews," which are invariably complimentary, give more space to the spoken than the silent drama.

Some one of these days the motion picture exhibitors are going to get up on their hind legs and howl "W-H-Y ? ?," and unless there is a change in the policy of the newspapers there will be a change in the space the exhibitors take. Some day the exhibitors are going to try a little Bolshevism with the papers and then there will be a fine kettle of fish for some one to fry.

Take Denver as a typical example. One of the papers recently ran seven paragraphs on a stock company playing at the Denham theatre. Four paragraphs were devoted to the Tabor showing vaudeville. The Orpheum, vaudeville, drew a long write up, and the movies — all the movies on surtis street had was six paragraphs!

Put in that same edition of that same paper those movies had six times the space that the Denham, Tabor and Orpheum theatres combined used!

This same paper refuses to run any gratis stories that are published in press books, never prints a gratis photograph of a star. Yet it gives the Tabor, whose advertising has never been as liberal as any one of several movie houses, a long free story with a two column cartoon by the staff cartoonist!

The Denver Post is meeting the exhibitor almost half way. While the Post is not printing as much about the pictures as it should, considering the space taken, the Post is printing a column of news from the studios, and running stories from the press books.

Conditions in Denver are no different from what they are in many others cities. There are exceptions of course. In St. Louis, Cleveland and several other big towns the papers are doing more than their share. But the writer has been on the staff of half a dozen papers in half a dozen cities through the West and South and the exhibitors face the same thing in four out of six cities.

Perhaps in Chicago and New York, where Burns Mantle, Channing Pollock and other well known critics do the reviews the papers must needs devote most of their space to the legitimate productions. But in the smaller cities where there are no Channing Pollocks, and criticism is simply gratis boosting, then the movie exhibitor has a legitimate right to an even break.

Williams Regards Photoplay as a Fine Art

HOW many picture exhibitors are there in this country who look upon the presentation of moving pictures as he would that of music? Charles H. Williams, manager of the Strand Theatre in Providence, "The Million Dollar Theatre," regards the photoplay much as he regards the finer art, music, and his program and policy are established along that line.

A correspondent of the Motion Picture News interviewed Mr. Williams this week and allowing him to speak for himself had the following to say:

"Perhaps my reason for my arrangement of programs would be best brought out by saying my idea of entertainment in photoplays is the same as music — all successful compositions of music start off with the prologue or introduction which is needed to emphasize the layman's thought that he may better get the harmony and continuity of story that is always brought out if properly understood in music. And as in photoplays also in music there is always a finale. So I start the program with an overture in conjunction with a travelogue. Following this with a reel of news and topical events condensed from three or four news and magazine weeklies, and then into the lighter feature. After this for a slight diversion, either a comedy, vocal number, or some such diversion that will give their thought a moment to rest, and then into the larger feature, and as the advertising is worked correspondingly, the patrons are prepared and expect the program as it reels off to improve.

"Why do I use a time table? For the same reason as above. The majority of patrons resent coming into the middle of any subject, especially the features. I believe that a time table adhered to is a valuable asset. We have found that from five to fifteen minutes previous to the given time table there is always a steady flow of patrons coming in.

"The training of employees in their handling of patrons is one of the most valuable assets any house can have. We always try to have every attendant avoid all use of terms or language that could be construed as a command. For instance, in the seating of patrons we do not use the words 'Rise, please,' but instead, 'May we disturb you, please?' emphasizing the last word. Perhaps off-hand you would say they mean the same, but the first is a command and the second a request. The same method applies to all conversations between the attendant and the patron.

"Exploitation is 50 per cent of the success of any first-class photoplay house. What we mean by success is to get the maximum out of a picture, and in order to do this the one handling the exploitation not only requires an education and training in lines of publicity, but must be a man who can grow in the business, interpreting and conveying the theme properly contained on the program along the lines the house is trying to maintain, and the same standard the producer of the photoplay is trying to convey to the public."

Keenan and A Governor Dress Theatre Lobby

HERE'S a lobby display which could have a steady job with an exhibitor. To the left is Frank Keenan; to the right is Gov. Thomas E. Campbell of Arizona. The lobby, which is an important thing in the picture, is that of the Columbia Theatre in Phoenix, where a private showing of Mr. Keenan's "The World Aflame," a film story with the idea of teaching the relative status of Capital and Labor as a basis of its plot, was recently held for the benefit of the Arizona State officials. Governor Johnson was only one of the notables who attended the screening. In fact it was a gala day for Phoenix and the Columbia Theatre.

The next day Mr. Keenan took the film, out of courtesy to the Governor, to the State Penitentiary in Florence, and gave a special show for the inmates. The star also made a talk to the men, in which he urged "the square deal," one of the leading motives of his picture. He said afterward that he had never appeared before a more appreciative audience.

The prisoners appeared to enjoy the picture and applauded the domination of right as freely as if they themselves were not being punished for violation of the laws of their country.

Gersdorf, an Exhibitor Tender in Age But Not in Experiences

WE thought we might "start something" by publishing our recent story concerning the claim of George Vorhees of Flora, Ind., to being the youngest exhibitor in America and we have. Phil Gersdorf of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Florida has come through with the following letter. Mr. Gersdorf can't lay claim to the "youngest exhibitor" title as he admits to being nineteen to Mr. Vorhees seventeen, but he could lay claim to having about as wide an experience in the show business for his age as anyone we ever heard from. Read what he says concerning his showshop history. Incidentally we might add that the idea that most of us have that living in the South soon takes away the "pep" doesn't seem to hold good in Gersdorf's case. He appears to be very much a live wire as yet. Let's hope that he doesn't "slow up" with age.

I wonder if I have enough distinction to crowd into the pages of your esteemed magazine, with my classic countenance? I notice there seems to be somewhat of a contest as to who is the youngest exhibitor on record. I may not be the youngest, but I sincerely doubt if there are many more of my age who do the amount of work that I have to do. In the first place, I reached my nineteenth birthday on the 31st of last August, but have been in the picture game ever since a kid in short pants, when I ushered at theatres in Denver, Colorado, after school hours. Even previous to that, I used to give "pitcher shows" in the attic with an old Edison exhibition machine and rented old films from the various film exchanges.

When my parents moved to New York City, I thought that I would get some practical newspaper experience, as I had my heart set on becoming a publicity man. For a length of time I worked on the New York World, and by that time had a stronger desire than ever to get started right in the motion picture game. So, I got in touch with Samuel L. Rothapfel (than whom there is no finer exhibitor in the country to-day), who seemed to take an interest in me, and promised to help me if I would start in by ushering for awhile at the Rivoli, as he said I would get a great deal of practical experience in a position of this kind. While it was not my idea of breaking into the business, Another youthful showman, Phil Gersdorf, with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Jacksonville, Florida.

I have never regretted the six weeks spent at this work. True to his word, after a short while, Mr. Rothapfel promoted me to the publicity department where I was placed under the famous Terry Ramsaye. Moving again with my family to Detroit, Mr. Charles G. Branham, "The Live Wire," took me under his tutelage, and I worked with him at the Majestic, Detroit. When he left to join the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, I was made assistant manager of the Majestic and associate director of publicity for the Charles H. Miles' houses in Detroit, where I worked with Mr. George Guise, who was at one time city editor of the Minneapolis News, and from whom I garnered a great deal of valuable information. Seeing a chance to connect with the S. A. Lynch people, I came to Jacksonville, where I am now manager of the Savoy Theatre and in addition am director of publicity for the Lynch houses in Jacksonville.

Lobby display of the Oregon theatre, Salem, Oregon, C. O. Kupper, manager

Oregonians Strong for Lobby Displays

FROM no other State do we receive so many photographs recording the use of lobby displays as from Oregon. This latest sample is a display arranged by the Oregon Theatre of Salem. The Oregon has not gone beyond the producers' materials for its showing, but has succeeded with these aids in making the front of the theatre very attractive.

"Dorothy Phillips has been one of the biggest money-makers we have booked in the Oregon Theatre," says G. B. Guthrie, proprietor of the Oregon, and his expression is echoed by Charles O. Kupper, manager of the house.

Mr. Kupper makes liberal use of newspaper space in boosting features to play in the Oregon, which is the most modern theatre in Salem, and adheres to a lobby dress featuring mainly photos, which had lettered three-sheets at the sides of the entrance. A three-sheet cut-out of Dorothy Phillips was used by Mr. Kupper, and is proving very popular among exhibitors in all of the leading theatres that are runing "Paid in Advance."

Special two and three column cuts were made up and used in his newspaper advertising on "Paid in Advance."

World Series Used to Boom "Miracle Man", at Cincinnati

CINCINNATI was given a taste of real exploitation during World Series Week when Manager I. Libson of the Strand Theatre opened the way for a record-breaking two weeks' engagement of "The Miracle Man." Manager Libson realized that he had a wonderful opportunity to tell his story to thousands of persons at one time. He utilized the 35,000 crowd at Redland Field each of the first two games of the World Series. First he had printed 45,000 souvenir score cards, as compliments of "The Miracle Man."

Then came an idea in which Mr. Libson killed two birds, maybe three with one stone, meaning that he framed up a nice social afternoon for himself, gave some pretty girls who work in the Famous Players-Lasky exchange a good time and put over some good publicity for his feature picture, all in one master stroke.

He visited the Cincinnati office of Famous Players-Lasky and induced the manager to loan him the female office force, which according to report has a lot of good lookers in it, and in an automobile bearing "Miracle Man" banners the girls went to the ball park to distribute the score cards and to decorate thousands of men's hats with little hat-cards, stuck in the hat band, advertising "The Miracle Man." As Manager Pat Moran of the Cincinnati Reds is known as "The Miracle Man," the fans were glad to wear "Miracle Man" hat cards.

Then Manager Libson put on a big stunt as a climax of his campaign with the World Series. He secured the services of Pilot P. A. Wachtel of the Triangle Aviation Association, which is introducing aerial advertising into Cincinnati. While 40,000 fans were cheering the teams during each of the first two games in Cincinnati an airplane soared low over the field bearing "Miracle Man" banners. Suddenly a "man" came hurtling hundreds of feet through the air. The crowd gasped as "The Miracle Man" fell to the playing field in full view of everyone. The game was stopped and a policeman dragged the "Miracle Man" from the field. Pilot Wachtel then bombarded the crowds with score cards and flew away mid cheers. The stunt was repeated twice and later was carried out over the Latonia Race track where immense throngs were gathered for a Saturday's racing. This time a great parachute with a 20-foot banner was released by Wachtel and soared over the race track.

In addition to this stunt, Manager Libson took advantage of the Latonia racing crowds by sending auto loads of girls to the track to distribute "race tips." These were manilla envelopes printed in red: "Tips on to-day's races," in replica of actual "tips" sold by dopsters at the track. Inside the envelope was a slip saying: "The best bet to-day is to see 'The Miracle Man' at the Strand."

Then Manager Libson took advantage of another scene of great gatherings — the Cincinnati speedway where races were held He framed up a stunt of having the girls search for "The Miracle Man" and had a racer ride under "The Miracle Man's" colors.

Still not satisfied with his campaign, Manager Libson arranged a stunt with the Cincinnati Post, giving away ten tickets a day to those sending in the best testimonial for the efficacy of Post Want Ads. The Post's circulation manager, Mr. Calhoun, gave hearty co-operation in the way of free publicity.

Then Manager Libson pulled a few strings and won some more publicity, incidentally national publicity for "The Miracle Man." He arranged to have one of the big races at Latonia called "The Miracle Man Handicap" and presented a cup. This brought tremendous publicity in newspapers, "dope sheets," etc. Those familiar with Cincinnati during the racing meets will know what an important thing race horse publicity is at such a time. Everybody goes to the track or stays home and "bets" anyway.

Mr. Libson had the co-operation in his campaign of W. N. Robinson, exploitation man for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and he backed up his "stunt" campaign with big newspaper space.

The importance of "The Miracle Man" engagement at the Strand was heightened by the fact that with it, Mr. Libson opened his new policy, insalling an orchestra under a well known leader, Prof. Erwin Bellstedt, enlarged his programs, and raised his prices from 15c for all seats to 18 and 27 cents (plus tax).

"HOW New York Stages the Show" is dropped from our pages for the time being because of the publication problem which is confronting us. Likewise the criticism of exhibitors advertising for this week. We hope to be able to resume this latter section with next week's issue.

Window display advertising which the Park theatre, Boston, did on "The Miracle Man" in the show windows of an empty store across from the theatre

Park Theatre, Boston, Puts Over Record Window Display

A WINDOW display, said to far eclipse anything heretofore attempted in Boston, helped to put "The Miracle Man" over with a bang at the new Park Theatre on Washington street. During the time the Park was closed and undergoing renovation, preparatory to opening on September 1 with "The Miracle Man," Sam Pinansky, its live-wire manager, decided that something out of the ordinary was needed to announce the new opening.

Directly across Washington street was the big Siegel-Cooper store, now untenanted, its fifteen mammoth display windows covered with government bills and thick with dust and dirt. Pianansky cast longing eyes at the dirty windows and then got busy. In less time than it takes to tell, Pianansky had a lease on every one of the windows, the only stipulation being that no bills were to be posted.

"Anybody can hang bills in a window," said Sam, "We'll give 'em a real display, something that will stop the crowds."

Window cleaners were set to work. J. J. Burns, the best window trimmer in the Bean City was engaged; a poster company started on the cut outs, and within three days every one of the fifteen windows blossomed forth with a "Miracle Man" display that never failed to draw the crowds.

In making the display the following compo board cut-outs were used:—3-24 sheets; 10-6 sheets; 20-3 sheets; 30-1 sheets. Ninety 11 x 14, 90-8 x 10, 15-22 x 28 photographs and 3 framed color enlargements were artistically arranged in the windows. Fifteen hand-lettered half-sheet cards, each with a different "selling talk" culled from the ads in the press book, proved extremely effective. Mounted strip dates tied up the display with the Park Theatre. After the opening these were changed to read "Now Playing. Park Theatre Directly across the street."

In dressing the windows, paper arches were framed against the glass. A ground cloth and draperies against the back wall greatly increased the artistic effectiveness.

Rival theatre managers almost turned green with envy when they spotted the Park's tremendous display in the heart of the shopping district. Needless to say "The Miracle Man" opened with a bang, and business has been capacity since the doors of the renovated and beautified theatre were first swung open.

The big window display was, of course, only a small part of the exploitation campaign. Ads, some of them a quarter page, were taken in all the Boston papers. The regular billboards were used, supplemented with a thorough sniping campaign. The subway and elevated one-sheet boards carried "The Miracle Man" paper.

Clune's Originates Novel Advertising Stunt

Clune's Broadway theatre of Los Angeles recently originated a clever little advertising stunt for it's engagement of "Better Times."

What at first glance appeared to be a regular orthodox theatre ticket was printed and distributed about the city.

People would pick up the piece of cardboard under the impression that they had found a ticket which would admit them to some good show.

On close inspection the "lucky" person would see that he had been compelled to read some advertising for the "Better Half," with the announcement that it was playing all the week at "Clune's."

The tickets were not misleading once they were given close inspection and the finders therefore could not claim that they had been "fooled."

Another window utilized by the Park theatre for "The Miracle Man," display

Manager Ormsby of the Plaza, Waterloo, Iowa, may be a little gray at the temples, but he seems to be able to "cop off" the "chickens."

Exploiting Personality of Screen Star, With Feature Supplementary

AS a rule exhibitors don't leave the important matter of making friends for a theatre to their advertising managers, press agents, or publicity representatives. In most instances, such vital matters as those which have to do with public feeling toward a theatre are generated from the main office, where the mahogany desk, the plush carpet, the imperial buzzer and the cigars are to be found.

The Strand Theatre, at Louisville, Ky., has an advertising manager named Joe Goldberg. Perhaps the Strand didn't know it but when the publicity arrangements for "A Temperamental Wife," starring Constance Talmadge, were placed in Goldberg's hands, he immediately started mapping out a plan for increasing the popularity of the Strand.

Underlying the action that Goldberg took, was the realization of the greatest handicap the motion picture exhibitor has — namely, the difficulty of bringing his audiences in close personal contact with the star. In this sense, the stage has an advantage over the motion picture. The flesh and blood appearance of an actor is a decided asset. In a good measure, fan magazines, newspaper motion picture editors and other sources combine to bring about a closer relation between the motion picture audience and the star. But for the most part, exhibitors are content to present a picture and allow the personality of the star to draw what it may, indifferent as to exerting any personal effort to secure a larger attendance through increased popularity of the star.

Goldberg recognized the logic of the foregoing. He felt, as hundreds of other exhibitors do, that the problem of keeping the public interested in motion picture stars is no other than that of keeping the public informed as to the personal activities of the stars. A newspaper item about a star is more helpful to that star than it is interesting to the public. The fact a person has a personal acquaintance with a star is assurance that the productions of that star will be looked forward to with keen anticipation. Were it possible to show pictures of a star who numbered a million theatre goers among his personal friends that star would be the best box office attraction we could possibly get.

But the problem of having a star meet thousands of people has not been proven practicable. It has been tried countless times and failed a great many more times than it has succeeded. Stars are temperamental. It is not hard for an exhibitor to understand that a star can make more friends by leaving her destinies in the hands of a reliable press agent than by attempting to make a cross-country tour.

With this sentiment in mind Goldberg set about increasing the popularity of Constance Talmadge. This is not an easy thing to do. Miss Talmadge's greatest asset is her popularity with screen audiences. And yet Goldberg wanted to increase that popularity. And he did!

Those who scanned the advertising columns of Louisville newspapers during the run of "A Temperamental Wife," at the Strand were surprised to find in a box about two inches deep by two columns wide, a heading: "To Constance Talmadge." The reader was puzzled immediately. He was halfway uncertain as to whether some local poet had become inspired by one of Miss Talmadge's productions and had proceeded to give vent to his artistic talent by buying advertising space to print his effort. Reading further the curious newspaper customer read that: "We're stronger for you than we ever have been before since we have seen you in 'A Temperamental Wife.'" Then followed some more personal praise for the star rather than for the production. The ad. ended with a "Thanks very much, Constance — Strand Theatre."

That was, in the language of the showman — "new stuff." In the fan magazines, in the magazine sections of newspapers — once in a while, the casual citizen had seen poems written by effervescent youths and dedicated to Constance Talmadge. But never before in the history of Louisville, had a theatre taken occasion to devote four inches of perfectly good advertising space to thanking a star for a good picture. People wondered whether Constance Talmadge would ever see that item. It brought them into closer touch with her.

Throughout his entire exploitation campaign Goldberg centered his theme in such a manner as to bring out the personality of Constance Talmadge. A new word was coined in Louisville for use in the promotion of this picture. That word was "peppy," nothing more than the adjective derived from the noun — PEP.

Ah, Girls Advertise "Oh Boy"

YOU may not know it, but out in Iowa the cattle and the horse business is the regular accepted vocation of most of the residents of the State, that is in one form or other. Some people deal in the animals themselves, others raise the stuff they eat, and so forth and so on.

Therefore, when S. A. Ormsby, manager of the Plaza Theatre of Waterloo, found that his engagement for "Oh Boy" was to have direct competition in The Dairy Cattle Congress, which is quite as pretentious an organization as its name, and also the Belgium Horse Show, and that every amusement under the sun was open in full blast for the entire week, he began to wonder what his film show would be playing to.

The result of his thinking took form in some extra advertising, which is shown by the accompanying photograph. Mr. Ormsby hired a team and a nice "democrat" wagon with a top, quite a relic these in this section, but out in Iowa still used extensively, and then he loaded the eight fair maidens into his rig, fixed up his signs advertising the picture and started out to tour the city. Now you may think this is commonplace stuff and hardly worth while, but let us advise you that a wagon load of "chickens" are good for attention even in a city which is mainly interested in horses and cattle.

The result of Mr. Ormsby's efforts were two-fold, at least. The girls did enjoy the ride, and they liked the man who gave it to them even if he is white haired, and people did come to see "Oh Boy." Therefore, this can be termed a good advertising stunt. Of course, Mr. Ormsby might have secured an automobile and filled it with boys or children, but we're willing to gamble that if he had, less business and certainly less pleasure for himself would have been forthcoming from the trip.

Another "Fashion Week" Which Proved Successful

THE deeds of Thos. D. Soriero when considered from the showman's angle are not unknown to the readers of the News for as a member of our Advisory Board he has contributed many interesting articles. Therefore we will only need to state that this is Mr. Soriero's own story concerning the history of his recent "Fashion Week," written by special request, the information having filtered into our office that such an event was being staged at the Strand, Lowell, Mass., of which Mr. Soriero is managing director.

"In my estimation one of the most successful factors that make for efficient theatre management is the novelty element in connection with the operation of one's theatre. By this I mean the establishment of some novelty (either of display, contests, etc.) that come to mean a regular part of the theatre's offering.

"For instance, during the past week I have had a display at the Strand Theatre in this city that has caused particularly favorable comment and reflects on whatever meagre ability I possess as a general manager, and displays the fact that I am constantly on the lookout for something attractive with which to please my patrons.

"As it was 'Fashion Week' the display was conspicuously appropriate. In the past I have used lobby displays that bore some relation to the feature picture of my bill, to wit: I placed over all the hand-carved chairs in the rest lobby a banner, a black banner by the way, bearing the lettering 'The 13th Chair.' Most of the persons who saw it were, of course, mystified by this. Some even commented on the fact that I must be a 'poor fish' or something to that effect, if they thought I could prey on their superstitions like that. It was altogether laughable. But would anybody use those chairs? They might have been electric chairs for all they were used while the black banners were on them.

"However, they were much relieved the following week when I used this picture, that is to say, 'The 13th Chair,' and there was considerable joking about the public superstition, etc.

"But to return to the present lobby display anent 'Fashion Week.' Nearly every large department store had made special window displays and were advertising heavily about fashion week. The women, of course, were vitally interested and it seemed a propitious time to seize upon their interest for the purposes of theatre advertising; so accordingly I got into communication with one of the biggest stores here in Lowell—'Chalifoux's'—and when I explained to them the mutual benefit in setting up a fashion display on my stage between feature pictures, set forth by real mannequins, they appreciated its advertising possibilities and consented to the plan.

"An exquisite drawing-room set was placed on the stage with every adjunct necessary to create a rich and harmonious atmosphere. The lighting was adjusted to blend with the fixtures and the tonal colorings of the expensive draperies and tapestries. Everything was in harmony with the central idea, viz., to create the best possible element in which to display the gowns and other habiliments. There is nothing like creating the proper atmosphere for a proper appreciation for whatever you are going to serve the public, whether it is broiled live lobster, moving pictures or women's gowns.

Soriero's fashion show at the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass.

"It required one hour to complete the display, and without exaggeration the comments heard in the audience as each mannequin came out amid the carefully prearranged 'atmosphere' absolutely proved that the novelty was worth while. As each model stepped into the big drawing room, special and harmonious music was played, and as they went through the various motions to properly display the gowns (or whatever garment they were wearing) to the best advantage, they were well applauded according as the garment struck their fancy. When I say that music was played I mean that it was suggestive music more than anything else, and was as nearly appropriate to the garment as was possible—in other words, it was unobtrusive, low and soft throughout.

"A myriad of evening gowns, afternoon dresses, street suits, sport outfits, riding habits, business dresses, and the rest of the feminine equipment, paraded before the audience in a sartorial panorama that was at once dazzling and arresting in its richness and effect.

"Before I bore you I want to mention that the children were not forgotten; and one section of the stage was made up as a child's nursery, and little tots, acting as models, showed off to good advantage the latest creations of the modist's art for the kiddies, and the effect was very pretty. Here, too, every form of clothing worn by the youngsters was shown, and this particularly interested the women. A school-day scene was worked out to good advantage.

"All this was carefully prearranged and worked out in detail, just the same as a play is built piece by piece and act by act, that the result may codify into a uniform whole. Rehearsals were held which guaranteed a smoothness of presentation which otherwise might have marred the effect of the entire display.

"The cost of the clothing worn (I have the figures given me by the store management) was about $30,000 and equalled in splendor and style the smartness of the clothing worn even at the Winter Garden shows. As a grand finale all the mannequins appeared on the stage together, and with a multi-colored display of lights made a decidedly pretty scene. Then they came down from the stage and paraded through the audience, that a closer view might be secured of the gowns and other apparel.

"I don't claim that this idea is new. Theatre managers have long used lobby displays advertising their pictures, etc., but a thing can always be improved upon; and by sympathetic and minute care to detail to create the decidedly right atmosphere is what I strive for. And I have been surprised with the results. This need not take up all of one's time. I have had to look out for three theatres in remote sections of the state, but have always managed to superintend these little novelties without neglecting my other work, and I want to assure you that they pay.

"Perhaps it may be suggested that my theatre appeals to a class of patrons that like this sort of thing. But it has been the same in all of the theatres. In the various cities where my theatres are, they represent the finest play-houses and the cleanest where moving pictures only are shown. My patrons are of the best, so this 'nov-

A tie-up with "The Book Shop" which the Liberty of St. Louis found profitable in advertising "Evangeline."

Shafer of St. Louis, Makes "Evangeline" Cinch His New Job

ACCORDING to Walter D. Shafer, late of New York, St. Louis did not welcome him at the railway station with a brass band and fireworks when he followed Horace Greeley's advice and went far enough West to take charge of the Liberty Theatre of said city, succeeding Edward Hyman who had hit the trail, promotionward however, for Denver.

It is a fact that many of these who are engaged in the "game" in St. Louis had never heard of Mr. Shafer before but what he has accomplished in a few weeks has not only opened the eyes of those managing film exchanges but has also enlightened the exhibitors in St. Louis.

Shafer reached the Liberty and took over the reins of management under the title of Managing Director, a few weeks ago at a time when the house was playing "Checkers."

The first "big" production scheduled to be shown in St. Louis after Shafer assumed his new duties was "Evangeline," the picturization of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's immortal love epic. With the true instinct of a successful manager Shafer laid plans for one of the most successful exploitation campaigns ever conducted by a photo-play theatre in St. Louis.

For a full week a slide, with the letters of "Evangeline" twisted about so as to read "LENEAVNEIG," was shown on the screen at every performance with the announcement that those who could rearrange the letters accurately would receive a money prize. Sufficient time was allowed to enable anyone to copy the letters in order that they might work out the problem at their homes.

Then for three days Shafer inserted the mystic letters in the newspapers which carry his advertisements and waited to see what would happen.

A veritable flood of solutions from the Liberty patrons almost swamped Shafer's office. While no accurate count was made of the number of replies received from contestants it is estimated that more than 1,000 reached Shafer's hands.

The larger portion of the replies were correct but among those which were wrong were some that would appeal to anyone's sense of humor. The following are a few of the solutions that brought smiles to Shafer's face: "Evening Lea," "Leaning Ena," "Nine Leg Eva," "Anna Lee Veig," "Evening Ale" and "Genie Alven."

To the first successful contestants substantial money prizes were awarded and to the others a courteous letter inclosing some complimentary tickets was posted thereby assuring that no ill feeling sometimes a result of contests existed.

Realizing the educational value of "Evangeline" Shafer then took another step to accomplish two purposes. The first was to interest every school child in the city, both public and parochial, in the production and secondly, to insure the box office success of the picture. To the principal of every public and parochial school and the instructors of English in each of the five great High Schools in St. Louis Shafer mailed an invitation requesting them to be guests of the Liberty for the showing. The school "marms," both men and women lost no time in accepting Shafer's invitation. That they were pleasingly impressed with the manner in which Longfellow's magnificent word picture was carried out on the screen is evinced by the fact that numerous teachers called Shafer and asked if he wouldn't run an afternoon performance for the school children at an hour that would not interfere with their studies.

Shafer assured his inquirers that such performances would be given and the result was that not only were the matinees attended by larger audiences than ever before in this history of the theatre but a new clientele was formed.

It is safe to say that the fact that a school child was to attend a performance of "Evangeline" was transmitted to his parents. And during the matinees of "Evangeline" there have been more expensive and liveried automobiles in front of the Liberty Theatre than any other photo-play theatre in the city can boast of. Having accomplished all of the foregoing things did not cause Shafer to stop his campaign.

He negotiated with the president of The Book Shop, which is situated near a street car corner where thousands of high school and university students transfer several times a day, for a window in which to advertise "Evangeline."

The window display in The Book Shop was one of the best ever designed for the exploitation of a photo-play production in that section of the city. At the bottom of his daily advertisement in the newspapers Shafer added an announcement that Longfellow's "Evangeline," in book form, was on sale at The Book Shop.

The management of The Book Shop did a wonderful business on the strength of the Liberty's advertisement and Shafer obtained a wonderful window in which to advertise his picture.

Shafer also obtained a window in the largest of the Kresge 5 and 10 cent stores and further exploited his attraction.

Another "Fashion Week" Which Proved Successful

elty' idea isn't something that they fail to respond to.

"I shall continue the smaller lobby displays, but periodically it is my ambition to give my patrons something special like the fashion display. Very soon I shall give them a shoe display, coming appropriately at the time of the big shoe exposition in Massachusetts; and at this I intend to use the same care as to detail that has just marked the fashion show.

"I intend to have a display of shoes that range from the very latest creations of the shoemaker's art, these in infinite variety, right down the ages, including the sandal period, wooden shoe era, fur years, etc., to the time when they wore practically nothing. The styles of shoes worn in other countries in the later centuries Dark Ages, Resteration, Elizabethan, will be shown as a novelty. I have access to these olden time shoes, which are priceless by the way, and they should prove a novelty; and if the busy-body nowadays won't go to the art museums I will bring the art museum to him under the most pleasant surroundings."

Cut-outs of the star and the "bishop" were used effectively by the A-mus-U in this window display for "The Brat."

How Bosten Put It Over at Muscatine, Iowa

THIS is a story of the showmanship of a Middle West exhibitor who answered our appeal for information on the subject. The city in which this exhibitor lives is Muscatine, Iowa. The exhibitor is Ludy Bosten.

Ordinarily we are not for the "stunts" which have a chance of leaving some body "sore" and at different times have commented unfavorably on such advertising. However this one, meaning Mr. Bosten's pet scheme according to his own story, we think can be given official O.K. Any automobilist who was inclined to lose his temper because a clever advertising scheme had tricked him into making a call at police headquarters wouldn't be much of a sport.

The A-mus-U theatre of Muscatine, Iowa, secured an excellent location for a cut out of Nazimova in advertising "The Brat."

This is from Mr. Bosten's letter:

In beginning my campaign here on "The Brat" and after posting the paper I began to study the posted paper for cutouts, from the 24 sheet stand, Nazimova in the center taking up 6 x 7 feet of the stand, and after four of the seven stands were posted an idea struck me. I had all the posting on the 24 sheet stand stopped, which just left me three stands. With the three left I had three large cutouts made. Two of these cutouts were placed at the edge of town, picking the two most traveled roads leading to the city, the third I saved to be used in another way, down town. I went to find the best located building in the city, which I located without any trouble and within half an hour the deal was closed for the placing of my cutout, and the photo enclosed will show you just how it was used. With this planted, I go to the opposite side of the street to which the cutout was set and arranged a very Strong Spot Light from the third story which was used on the cutout at night, and believe me, this drew some attention. This ad was used one week in advance of the showing date, clear of all reading matter with the exception of WHO IS SHE, which linked up with the campaign carried by the Paramount Artcraft used in some advertising used by me some time ago, and it began to make the public think. Four days before the opening I used the small announcement place on the cutout as you will set in the Photo.

In connection with this I arranged with the Schmidt Music Store for exploiting the Song "The Brat." The Photo will give you some idea of this window display, but it being very dark it does not do the window its due justice, as this was a very attractive window display. To the left of the Photo one is not able to make out the idea carried, on this side a phonograph and a small cabinet. On the cabinet was a small cutout of Nazimova's leading man in the picture which carried a neat little show card reading "ThatS great let's all go to the A Muse U and here it sung by (the singers name)."

In connection with the Schmidt window I walked direct across the street and arranged with the Butz Fair Store for another window display. This Photo came out very satisfactory, but it omits the School Slates that was used in the front which carried many snappy little readers that seemed to tickle those who gave the window the once over. With these two windows, I also lined up the two five and ten cent stories which carried the sheet music on "The Brat."

But here is the stunt I myself think a great deal of which I also used on my campaign, and I believe it will be a winner in any city that it is used in, a tag reading (DONT PARK HERE). Two thousand of these I had printed, and the girl in the box office completed them by adding the string. On Saturday, four days before the opening of the picture, I arranged with the chief of police for two of his extra men, and with them the writer tagged every auto parked in the city. The tag was tied to every steering wheel in such a manner that "Don't Park Here" was the first thing that caught the driver's eye. With this tag stunt the city has about this same tag with about the same reading, "Dont Park Here, call at Police Headquarters," and a number of the drivers called at the station without turning the card over, and then they called on writer to give him h——.

I cannot but feel with this same stunt that I used here will prove a winner in any real live city, as it sure woke up this old town.

Ludy Bosten, not only a good, but a good looking showman.

Bringing the atmosphere of Alaska to Texas proved a business getter for the Old Mill theatre of Dallas.

Grauman's "The Dream of the Flower Girl"

IN the realms of showmanship, as in other fields, there are various types of successful men. There are those who do nothing spectacular, but somehow or another consistently please their following with a very artistic mode of presentation week in and week out. Then there is th man who does the startling, the unexpected, the spectacular! It is not an overstatement to say that Sid Gauman has blended in his managerial capacity the artist and the showman. The consistent high plane at which Gauman presentation is kept is too well known to need elaboration in these columns. Some of his acts, prologues and musical creations and conceptions are smashingly spectacular! The week of September 22d marked the presentation at Grauman's of an interpretative dancing number, supplemented with a touch of pantomime and a violin solo that positively swept audiences off their feet, through the sheer sublimity of beauty manifested in the stage set and permeating the atmosphere. The act opens with a drop curtain showing a New York downtown street about the time dusk is deepening into night. In front of a Bohemian middle class cafe is seated a pretty little flower girl in front of a typical cheap florist's stand. From inside the cafe come floating the sweet strains of a violin playing Kreisler's "Leibersfreud." The girl, her soul touched with the tender melody, expresses her emotions in interpretative dancing and pantomimic facial emotion. Soon the violinist himself, a tall, poetic looking fellow, emerges from the cafe, passes the flower stand and purchases a boutonniere. The girl falls deeply in love, and while seated at her stand thinking of the moments of ecstacy when the musician passed the stand, while night comes stealing on, she drops into a deep slumber. Then comes a slow lighting up of the stage, and the audience gasps with awe and wonder as the beautiful scene gradually is revealed. The set depicts the gardens of a royal palace, and lying on a stone bench, just awakening, is the flower girl, dressed in beautiful, soft white raiment. Standing upon the top step of a stone casement is the cafe violinist, transformed into a prince, wearing a uniform of gold and green. Seeing him, the girl begins a wild, free, impassioned dance, as the violinist plays Kreisler's "Caprice Viennois." Finally, he comes slowly down the steps, and she walks toward him. As she goe into his arms, the lights go out and in another second are flashed on again, and lo! The girl awakens at her street flower stand.

The Aeroplane for Advertising Again

THE show business is ever quick to grab any new medium of publicity which comes along. Just now it is the aeroplane which progressive exhibitors are pressing into service for publicity purposes. We have published several stories how this comparatively new means of traveling has been utilized to this purpose. Here is another instance, like the others except that the manager took to the air himself rather than to leave the actual advertising to some one who wasn't "aeroplane shy." Well, nerve is needed in the show business and evidently Carl F. Miler, manager of the Strand Theatre, Fremont, Ohio, has it, the right kind, too.

Mr. Miller made his flight on September 18th, stayed in the air a half hour and lived to tell the tale. Here is what one of the Fremont papers said about his stunt:

"To advertise the Strand theatre and the opera house, Manager Miller of both amusement places, will take a trip in the air over Fremont Thursday afternoon at one o'clock and distribute hundreds of admission tickets for both his theatres. At the same time the city and the fair grounds will be bombarded with advertising matter and free admissions which will entitle those who pick them up to attend either one of the play houses and enjoy the performances. Keep your eye on the airplane Thursday at one o'clock and perhaps get enough free tickets to take the entire family and your guests to either the Strand or the opera house."

It is easier for a theatre to acquire a bad reputation than it is for a new manager to live it down.

Another of the artistic dance numbers which "Grauman's" is featuring each week at the "Million Dollar Cinema Palace."

Carroll McComas Contracts With Famous Players-Lasky

Carroll McComas, recognized as one of the leading actresses of the spoken stage, has answered the call of the silent drama and has signed a contract with Famous Players-Lasky as leading woman in the forthcoming production of "Jack Straw," in which Major Robert Warkick will star under the direction of William C. DeMille.

Most of Miss McComas' stage work has been done on Broadway, New York. She was with Charles Frohman for five seasons, scoring her most pronounced success in "The Dollar Princess." She was with John Drew in "Single Man" and in David Belasco's "Seven Chances." "Oh Lady, Lady!," a musical comedy, was an individual triumph for her.

Universal Heralds Aero Feature

Lieutenant Locklear Who Changes Planes in Mid Air is to Thrill in "Cassidy of the Air Lanes"

AN unusual photoplay which Universal is heralding as the most thrilling production of the year is soon to be released. The tentative title is "Cassidy of the Air Lanes," and features Lieutenant O. L. Locklear an American aviator who won honor for his work in the war. Lieutenant Locklear, who holds the distinction of being the only aviator in the world to change planes in mid-air.

The picture contains a number of thrilling battle scenes made in the air at night. For two weeks, the flying field at Universal City was brilliantly illuminated at night and the uncanny sight of an aviator jumping from one plane to another, attracted thousands of Californians to the scene.

That modern marvel, the wireless telephone plays an important part in this picture When Jacques Jaccard, who directed the picture found that it would be impossible to communicate with Locklear by means of signals, the latter suggested that his plane be equipped with a wireless telephone. It required several days to install the equipment, but when it was completed, Locklear was able to communicate with the director at a distance of 5,000 feet above the ground.

"Cassidy of the Air Lanes," is a modern story of an American aviator who encounters air pirates, fights them to a finish, beats them to a frazzle and goes on his way to the girl of his heart.

Three months were spent in making this feature and fully fifty speedy byplanes were used in the production. A squad of daring cameramen mounted on air-cruisers were employed in making the scenes above the clouds.

Prominent in the cast in support of Lieutenant Locklear are Francelia Billington, Ray Ripley, Carmen Phillips, Allan Forrest and others equally well known. An exceptionally fine line of posters is being made for the picture, and many novel advertising and exploitation schemes are being prepared for exhibitors.

Much advance publicity is being given the picture by Lieutenant Locklear who has been thrilling audiences all over the country with his plane changing stunt. He is now playing engagements at all of the large state fairs and receiving many columns of newspaper publicity which exhibitors who book this feature may capitalize.

Realart Expansion In The South

S. A. Lynch Enterprises and All the Saenger Amusement Houses Are Taken Over Under Contract

WITH the signing of contracts covering theatres of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises in many Southern states and the Saenger Amusement Company houses on the Gulf Coast, President Arthur S. Kane feels that Realart Pictures will be thoroughly represented in the large cities of the South. Announcement was made by Realart last week with regard to the signing of the E. H. Hulsey theatres, centering in Texas, these three circuits being the largest motion picture exhibitors below the Mason-Dixon line. Realart pictures will thus be shown to thousands of followers of the photoplay in Southern states.

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises have grown constantly and now are extending more rapidly than ever, new theatres being built and purchased. The list it is said now has more than 100 houses. The main offices are in Atlanta, Ga

The Saenger Amusement Company has offices in New Orleans and operates two of the largest and most up to date theatres in that city, the Strand and the Liberty. E. V. Richards, Jr., is general manager of the Saenger group of theatres in the Crescent City and the extensive holdings in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

Among the other contracts just reported to John S. Woody, Realart general manager, are the Strand, at Fort Dodge, Ia., of which J. Julius is manager; the Mission at Santa Barbara, Cal., managed by Edward Johnson; The Princess at Springfield, Ohio, under the direction of P. Chakers, and the Rialto, at Lincoln, Nebr. The Al Ringling Theatre, in the home town of the famous Ringling Brothers of circus fame, Baraboo, Wis., has contracted for Realart releases through manager C. Roser.

Sol Lesser Opens Headquarters in Los Angeles

A wire has been received announcing that Sol Lesser intends to establish his headquarters in Los Angeles with the principal branch-office in New York City. Harry B Caulfield will be associated with Mr. Lesser, and in the latter's absence Mr. Caulfield will manage the Los Angeles business. It is also announced that negotiations are now pending on the part of Sol Lesser to acquire screen novelties of the caliber of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin."

Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels are said to have another of their popular subjects in the Pathe comedy, "His Only Father."

More Eminent Author Films

Rinehart's "Dangerous Days" and Atherton's "Tower Of Ivory" Begun by Goldwyn

PRODUCTIONS by the two greatest American women novelists is the next undertaking of Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc., who begin work at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, October 10, on "Dangerous Days" by Mary Roberts Rinehart and "Tower of Ivory" by Gertrude Atherton. Both of these famous writers have had their novels represented on the screen before, but this is the first time they have gone to the studio and worked on the lot with the editorial and directing staff. Both are in California at the present time.

Reginald Barker will direct the production of "Dangerous Days" by Mrs. Rinehart. William Parke will direct the Gertrude Atherton picture, "Tower of Ivory" in which the lead will be played by Barbara Castleton.

The first production for the Eminent Authors, "The Cup of Fury" by Rupert Hughes, has been viewed by the studio staff and the first print is now on its way to the New York headquarters, where a special reception is planned. Reports on this picture accord it the highest praise, giving special credits to the high order of direction evidenced in the work of Hayes Hunter.

Three Big Fox Films for Brazil

South American Firm to Distribute "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," and "Queen of the Sea"

A DEAL which is considered one of the biggest and most important consummated during the present season has just been closed between Fox Film Corporation and the Cia. Brazil Cinematographica for the Brazilian rights to three of the biggest of the William Fox special features.

By the terms of the contract between the Fox organization and the Brazilian company, the latter will control the distribution and exhibition rights of these screen features throughout the entire Republic of Brazil.

The features included are Theda Bara in "Cleopatra," William Farnum in his great masterpiece "Les Miserables," and the spectacular production of "Queen of the Sea."

The signing of this contract took place in the branch office of Fox Film Corporation, Rue Sao Jose, 64 Rio de Janeiro. Mr. A. Rosenvald, the Fox manager of this office, has forwarded to the home office in New York a report of the negotiations, which is regarded as a master stroke in the South American film industry.

Mr. F. Serrador, president of the Cia. Brazil Cinematographica, whose headquarters are also in Rio de Janeiro, is already planning an extensive publicity and advertising campaign in advance of the distribution of the three Fox super productions, which are steadily pushing their way into popularity in that quarter of the globe.

Statement of British Company on "Twelve-Ten"

The British and Colonial Kinematograph Company, of London, calls attention to reports which have appeared crediting "Twelve-Ten" as a Herbert Brenon production.

Loew Houses Take "The Right to Happiness"

After a successful engagement of five weeks "The Right To Happiness" closed at the Park Theatre Sunday night, October 5. Marcus Loew has booked the picture for his entire chain of 28 theatres in New York, beginning the showing on October 6.

"Miracle Man" Exhibited in Atlanta Prison

Following a special showing of "The Miracle Man" to fifteen hundred inmates of the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Fred V. Chamberlin, Special Representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has received a letter from Fred E. Peters, editor of "Good Words," the newspaper published at the prison.

In his letter Mr. Peters thanks the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the showing of the film in the prison auditorium and informs Mr. Chamberlain that a full-page insert dedicated to the occasion will be run in the October issue of the "Good Words." Mr. Peters in speaking of the influence of the picture on the minds of the audience says: "Motives and resultant actions were so clearly traced and coherent from inception to denouement, that the moral lesson was raised to the nth degree of effectiveness."

Miss Sterling's New Rough Riding Film

Edythe Sterling, who at the head of her own company, recently finished "The Arizona Cat Claw" under the direction of Leon T. Osborne, and which World Pictures will release in October, is getting ready to start her second production, a picture story of the Northwest, entitled "The One Way Trail." The daring feats of horsemanship shown by Miss Sterling in "The Arizona Cat Claw" will be more than outdone in her new production if the situations in the scenario of "The One Way Trail" are faithfully carried out.

DeMille's $100,000 Ranch Destroyed

Forest fires that have been sweeping over Southern California have destroyed the thousand-acre playground of Cecil B. DeMille.

The ranch, with all its improvements, was valued by Mr. DeMille at $100,000. Seven houses had been built, one of them a particularly picturesque structure with a giant oak tree as its center. The flames whipped over the ranch, completely destroying everything in their path.

Beginning with November 2, Lloyd will appear in a series of two reel comedies to be released every four weeks. "His Only Father," final of the one reel Harold Lloyd comedy series produced by the Rolin Film Company for distribution through Pathe will be released on October 29th.

Goldwyn Studios Go Full Blast

All Companies Working at Full Speed on Productions for the Coming Months

WITH the completion of the pictures in the fall series announced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, directors and players at the mammoth Culver City establishment are working at full speed on the photoplays to be issued during coming months. The production policy, emphasized by Samuel Goldwyn during his recent visit to the Coast, requires that ample time be allowed every director to complete his work in the best possible way, and that he shall not be obliged to sacrifice the possibilities of a picture in order to keep up with a binding schedule. Production on the Coast is being conducted on a more extensive scale than ever before, ten directors occupying the Culver City stages.

William Parke, who has just finished directing Pauline Frederick's latest picture, has commenced work on an all star production of Gertrude Atherton's "Tower of Ivory", an Eminent Author's photoplay with a cast including Barbara Castleton, John Bowers, Sydney Ainsworth, W. Lawson Butt, Doris Pawn and Edythe Chapman. The story calls for exciting action and unusual locations, going all the way from a London street to a dance hall in San Francisco. There will be a number of scenes enacted in a theatre, also a spectacular shipwreck off the Pacific coast.

Harry Beaumont, who usually works with Tom Moore, is taking advantage of the star's trip to New York by directing an elaborate picturization of Rex Beach's novel and play, "Going Some". Jack Pickford, under the direction of Wallace Worsley, has started playing in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," a screen vesion of John Fox, Jr.'s novel of the same name. Having finished Geraldine Farrar's super-production, "The Flame of The Desert", Reginald Barker went to Catalina Island for a week's fishing preparatory to starting on Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Dangerous Days", an Eminent Authors picture.

Victor Schertzinger is taking the final scenes for a Mabel Normand production, the story for which was written by the director.

United Feature Of High Order

"The Corsican Brothers," Dustin Farnum in Lead, Expected to Set New Mark for the United

GOOD plot, elaborate settings, artistic direction, and an able cast are expected to make the United's forthcoming production of "The Corsican Brothers" a new standard of high order, according to the reports coming from the Coast and the United headquarters.

The picturization is based on the famous novel of Dumas, a work which, according to the statistics of public libraries, is said to be still in heavy demand. Certain it is that this story in book form has enjoyed much popularity in the past, and it is expected that the coming screen version of the tale will meet with great favor among the motion-picture fans.

Dustin Farnum will take the dual role of the Brothers, and with his excellent record as an exponent of characterizations in such plays as "David Garrick" and "The Scarlet Pimpernel," it is expected that the new production will give him the opportunity of adding more laurels to the successes that he has already scored. Mr. Farnum's supporting cast includes Gertrude Kingston, as the leading woman; Ogden Crane, Andrew Robson and Wedgwood Nowell.

It is reported that the producers are sparing no expense in equipping the show with costly and elaborate settings at the Astra studios, where the picture is being turned out under the able direction of Colin Campbell and the personal supervision of L. J. Gasnier.

To further the inherent appeal which "The Corsican Brothers" is believed to have for the public, the United is stated to be promulgating an intensive advertising campaign to aid the exhibitor in securing the maximum of financial returns from the presentation of the spectacular offering. Arrangements are under way, it is said, to secure the co-operation of booksellers and of libraries in advance of the release, so as to promote the reading of the work in book form and thus stimulate an interest in its screen dramatization.

Long Runs Are Rule For Fox's Two Big Features

So great has been the rush in New York State and Connecticut for bookings on the William Fox screen production of Henry M. Blossom's great racing play "Checkers" and the R. A. Walsh adaptation of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's poetic idyl "Evangeline," that it has been found necessary, according to reports, to put a special corps of clerks at work recording the contracts, deliveries and receipts.

The larger New York theatres, where the production of "Checkers" has already been shown, have been running the feature from three to five days, and, then, according to reports, before large houses in every instance. Up through Connecticut and New York State, full-week stands are said to be the usual thing.

The same New York theatres which contracted for the "Checkers" picture are in line with special bookings on "Evangeline," while the Poli Palace at Hartford and the Poli Palace at New Haven closed on it for a full week each.

Marie Pavis, who has the vampire role in Hallmark Pictures Corporation's serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," began her stage career in London, where she appeared, in stock and vaudeville for several seasons.

HARRISON'S OPINION IS—

"THE STORY IS UNIQUE. Here a man—Erich Stroheim—wl had never written a story for tl screen—had never directed a pictu in his life—and yet he writes on appears in it as one of the leadi characters, directs it—AND MAKI A MASTERPIECE OUT OF IT.

Rolling up a tremendous total all over the country

DOROTHY PHILLIPS

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS"

Box office statements from theatres all over the country are showing a tremendous total of money taken in on DOROTHY PHILLIPS in "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS." No picture of the present season compares with it in sheer hugeness, extraordinary dramatic strength and pulling power, especially and particularly in repeat performances. Many a picture has been "put over" by the amount and persistency of the display advertising. "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS" is being put over with a fraction of the usual advertising cost to exhibitors, the difference going into the pockets of the exhibitors themselves, and

Cash receipts are the only things that count

All that is necessary to put over "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS," is to start it off BIG. Once started the momentum grows as the run progresses. In other words, one audience sends back a bigger audience, keeping capacity at its height all during a run. After you've started properly a mere notice keeps your house packed. In New York, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Denver, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and scores of other cities, this has happened. If you haven't played "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS" arrange for a presentation in your house in a bigger way than you have ever handled any production before. Speak now to your nearest Universal Exchange.

Robertson-Cole Has Big Feature

Purchases "The Open Door" Which Is Reported as a Production of a Unique Character

ROBERTSON-COLE Company announces the purchase of "The Open Door," the big mystery feature film produced by the Artclass Pictures Corporation under the supervision of George M. Merrick. The picture was so entirely novel and daringly original that before it was purchased several of the leading motion picture critics in the country were called into consultation. After viewing it several of them, according to reports, agreed that it was far above the average in every way and would make one of the most sensational mystery films of the day.

One of the features of its direction lies in the fact that throughout the entire five reels not a single descriptive title is used. Only dialogue titles are used and the picture is not overburdened with them. Despite this the picture has been so ably handled that it carries itself over big without obtrusive titling and is in fact generally strengthened in the process.

The picture was made by Artclass entirely in the East. The streets of New York offered the background for some of the scenes and a part of the picture was shown in Sing Sing Prison. Here the old cell block of gray stone, erected more than sixty years ago and made famous by the agitation of Warden Thomas Mott Osborne to have it abolished, is shown in all its dank misery.

It is stated that the cast which interprets "The Open Door" has been carefully selected, and nothing has been left undone on the part of the producers to bring a high relief in every element of this engrossing story. The convict is ably portrayed by John P. Ward. Others in the cast are Anna Lehr, Edith Stocton, Diana Allen, Walter Miller, Sam Ryan, Bob Broderick and Frank Evans. The direction is by Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

Griffith Film Gets Big Bookings

Twenty Prints of "Broken Blossoms" at Work in Chicago — Pre-release Runs in Los Angeles and Pittsburgh

THE advance bookings on D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," which is being released through United Artists Corporation, already indicate beyond a shadow of a doubt that by release date the film will have been booked to a pre-release figure unprecedented in the annals of the motion picture history.

It is but natural that this vast write-up should carry with it the overthrow of many traditions and standards. One notable achievement is already a matter of record.

On the 20th of October in Chicago, twenty prints of "Broken Blossoms" will begin a run in twenty theatres in that city simultaneously. It is stated that this is without a doubt the largest number of prints of any special production, five reels or more in length, ever shown at one time in Chicago.

A pre-release run of "Broken Blossoms" was begun at the Duquesne Theatre in Pittsburgh on September 29th and according to James B. Clark, the house opened to absolute capacity and was practically sold out on the opening day for the balance of the week, at dollar and half prices.

In Los Angeles, at the Griffith presentation of "Broken Blossoms" at the Clune Auditorium, the picture is playing to more money than has ever been taken in for a film showing twice in one day and it goes without saying that the receipts at the Clune Auditorium top any previous receipts in the history of the house.

These are but indications of the way "Broken Blossoms" has taken hold and seem to justify every expectation that exhibitors and United Artists Corporation hold for the overwhelming success of the production in its release throughout the country.

Loew Books Graphic Film's "Someone Must Pay"

Graphic Film Corporation announces that its newest Abramson production "Someone Must Pay" starring Gail Kane, Edmund Greese and Jackie Saunders, is to open Loew Circuit in Greater New York, Oct. 13th.

The latest report of stateright sale includes the purchase of the right to "Someone Must Pay" for eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia by Michael Lessy of Philadelphia, who in conjunction with Joseph Singer, also of Philadelphia, is about to open exchanges in the Quaker City and in Washington, D. C., for the exploitation of super features only.

Fox News on First Appearance is Lauded by Many

Receipts by exhibitors of the first film of Fox News, the new semiweekly animated screen newspaper and magazine of Fox Film Corporation, for showing on October 11, has brought to the Fox offices a stream of telegrams and letters of congratulations. Added to these messages, friends and patrons of the organization have verbally assured William Fox, president of the corporation and editor of Fox News, of the great interest they have found in the first release — which they said more than met their expectations when they ran it privately for their own benefit.

As a result of the quality of this initial issue, orders are reaching the home offices by the score — exhibitors from all parts of the country being convinced of the magnitude and drawing power of the enterprise.

Speaking of the initial issue, Herbert E. Hancock, managing director, said:

"I am deeply gratified at the large number of congratulatory and commendatory expressions with which Fox News has been received by exhibitors. On all sides I hear praise — which sounds sweet in the ears of those who have labored so many weeks to achieve success. It was our purpose to make Fox News something entirely new and amusing, and I am told we have succeeded.

Strong Cast for Moore in "The Gay Lord Quex"

Supporting Tom Moore in his latest Goldwyn picture, "The Gay Lord Quex," is a strong cast, composed for the most part of players who at one time or another have been featured in big productions.

As Muriel Eden, Gloria Hope is said to be delightful. The part calls for a beautiful girl whose good influence is to bring Quex to a realization of the things worth while in life, and Miss Hope meets the demand.

Naomi Childers has a most difficult role as the stately Duchess of Strood, but she carries it off with her usual cleverness.

Hazel Daly is seen as Sophie Fullgarney, the little manicurist, whose quick mentality and skill at intrigue testify to her ability. Completing this unusual cast are P. H. McCullough, Arthur Housman, Kate Lester, Sydney Ainsworth, Kathleen Kirkham and Henry Miller, Jr.

Two Stories by Wallace Irwin for Madge Kennedy

Back in California from her three months of vacation, Madge Kennedy, the young Goldwyn star, is ready to begin work on one of the two themes which she has selected for her next productions. Both stories, "Trimmed with Red" and "The Blooming Angel," are by Wallace Irwin and appeared recently as serials in the Saturday Evening Post. They are said to offer splendid vehicles for the humorous and tender effects which belong peculiarly to the star, whose last picture, "Strictly Confidential," is now enjoying wide vogue.

"Blue Bonnet," Salvation Army Film is Commended

According to reports, "The Blue Bonnet," produced by the National Film Corporation of America and starring Billie Rhodes, has been well received in every section of the country. A great many letters have been received by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, highly commending the work, which, it is said, has done more to acquaint the public with the wonderful work done by the Salvation Army during the world conflict than any other medium. Not a few of these letters are said to have come from soldiers who came in contact with the "doughnut girls," here and abroad.

Rudolph Berger of the Hodkinson Washington branch recently gave a private showing of the production at the capital for the representatives of the various humanitarian societies. Elmer Johnson, Salvation Army commandant at Washington, writes; "I most heartly congratulate you on such a splendid film and fully endorse the same to the public. I feel sure that as soon as the public secs this film there will be a demand for it."

The Events in "The Bandbox" Really Happened

Louis Joseph Vance, author of "The Bandbox," the first of the Deitrich-Beck, Inc., productions, starring Doris Kenyon and released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, was witnessing the first screening of the picture with Theodore C. Deitrich, the producer. At the conclusion of the performance and after Mr. Vance had expressed his complete satisfaction with it, he suddenly turned to Mr. Deitrich and said:

"One of the most remarkable things about 'The Bandbox' is that the main incidents of the story actually happened in real life. But still more remarkable is the fact that they did not happen until the book was completed and in the hands of the printer, although not yet off the press.

"At first, many persons thought I had founded the story on these incidents until they began to reckon the time and found that the story had been written many months before the story in real life developed."

Tourneur's "Life Line" is Released Oct. 5

Paramount Artcraft feature releases announced for October 5 by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are "The Life Line" and "In Mizzoura," the former being the first of a series of Maurice Tourneur special productions under Mr. Tourneur's present contract with Famous Players-Lasky and the latter a picturization of one of the most successful plays of the American stage, with Robert Warwick in the stellar role.

"The Life Line," the scenario of which was written by Charles E. Whittaker, is founded on the famous old English melodrama, "Romany Rye," by George Robert Sims, who has written scores of successful plays since he embarked upon his career in 1875.

Catholic Council to Show Films

Famous Players Contracts With the National Catholic War Council on Films For Welfare Work

Paramount-Artcraft present Vivian Martin in "His Official Fiancee"

ONE of the most important contracts ever concluded in the field of educational and welfare motion pictures was consummated last week when the National Catholic War Council entered into the agreement with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for a large number of motion pictures to be used in the council's nation-wide civic education campaign. In accordance with the plans outlined for this campaign the pictures will be exhibited by parishes and organizations, associated with the council's work to promote better citizenship, a knowledge of the meaning of democracy, self-advancement and the love for wholesome films on the screen.

The contract is for a year's duration, but at any time during the year the council is at liberty to call upon Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for additional pictures to any amount. Something more significant than the mere signing of a dotted line or the expenditure of so many thousands of dollars is seen by leaders of the motion picture industry in the agreement. It marks the first time that a religious organization has given cognizance in such sweeping extent to the potency of the screen as a means of education and relaxation compatible with religious precepts.

"It is hardly necessary to point out," the council has stated in announcing its program, "the tremendous advantages of the motion picture plan of instruction in connection with this general scheme of education." The work is under supervision of four men who have a national reputation in educational, film or dramatic lines: Charles A. McMahon, Buffalo, N. Y., assistant educational director, National Catholic War Council, chairman of the committee; Michael Williams of New York, author, dramatic critic and editor of the National Catholic War Council Bulletin; Frederick A. Sweet of Worcester, Mass., expert on educational matters and the preparation of educational films, who will act as film editor; and Robert G. Drady, of San Francisco, well-known theatrical manager of the Pacific Coast, who will be business agent.

Fox News Staff Goes To Africa

J. C. Smith and Party Expect to Acquire Real Novelties For Fox News Screen

BOUND for adventure in the heart of darkest Africa, John C. Smith, his wife, Louise Tourez, and her sister, Rense Tourez, have just sailed from New York for Europe. Mr. Smith is an expert cameraman and his wife and sister-in-law are trained in the production of motion pictures. All are intent on braving the dangers of the wildest parts of Abyssinia, visiting native tribes that have never seen white folk, tracking wild animals to their lairs and photographing the virgin country for the first time it is said. They have been commissioned by William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, to make this journey as camera correspondents of Fox News.

Not only will Abyssinia be visited, but the party intends to tour Algeria, Moroeco, Tunis and Egypt for novel things to entertain motion picture audiences.

The party's route is from New York to Boulogne-sur-Mer, thence to Paris and Marseilles, where they will board a steamer for Algiers, which will be their "base of operations." Mr. Smith expects to leave Northern Africa shortly after his arrival for Adis Ababa, capital of Abyssinia, where he will meet Joseph Dixen, the explorer, who according to reports, has a better knowledge of the country and particularly of the Victoria Nyanza district than any other white man.

Especially valuable for the purposes of Mr. Smith's trip is a special teleseopie lens he took with him for the photographing of wild animals. Africa, of eourse, is the greatest hunting ground of the world, and some fine pictures of lions and other animals are promised by Fox News. These will not be ordinary zoological garden films, but actual motion pictures of the animals in their native environment, giving screen patrons instruetive and absorbingly interesting lessons in the habits of the jungle kingdom.

Another interesting point to be "covered" by the correspondents of Fox News will be Timgad, a ruined Roman city in the Sahara desert.

Morey's Next Release

The next Harry T. Morey feature to be released by Vitagraph will be "In Honor's Web," by Perry N. Vekroff. This will be the first Morey picture presented since Charles Klein's "The Gamblers."

Lloyd Tells of His Narrow Escape in Explosion

In a letter to the Home Office at Pathe Exchange, Inc., Harold Lloyd, star of the new $100,000 special two-reel comedies, to be released by Pathe, tells in his own words the story of the accidental explosion that nearly ended his career as a screen comedian.

"The way this accident occurred was through the carelessness of some one connected with the property room, mixing real bombs up with other props and sham bombs. Frank Ferry innocently picked this bomb from among other props, to use in a still picture of me lighting my cigarette with a bomb.

"I had the bomb up before my face, in position to light the cigarette, when by chance, I noticed that the fuse had burned low, and was not going to register well in picture. So, lowering the bomb from my face to an angle of about 50 degrees, I told Ferry he had better put in a new fuse. But just at that moment it exploded.

"Had the bomb been before my face, then, well, I wouldn't be writing to you now.

"My hand is healing very good. I am in my new home now; have a very comfortable and beautiful place that I was fortunate in renting, just a few days before my accident."

Predicts Success of First Rupert Hughes Picture

A telegram to Rupert Hughes from Abraham Lehr at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City gives the latest news hot from the wire on the first Rupert Hughes production for Eminent Authors' pictures. Mr. Lehr wires, "J. G. Hawks saw six reels of broken continuity Cup of Fury to-day and predicts it will be a bear-cat and we are all highly enthusiastic over Hayes Hunter's direction."

"The Cup of Fury," from Major Hughes' latest novel, was prepared for the screen under the direction of the author, who went to the Coast to assist in production. The continuity for "The Cup of Fury" was rewritten three times, and the author was actively interested in the process. Rupert Hughes has also written the continuity of his second production, which is now awaiting filming.

Fall Bookings of "Sahara" Surpass Summer Demand

It is reported that Louis Glaum's production, "Sahara," has had a remarkably good season during the summer months. However the Hodkinson Corporation, which has had the picture under distribution, announces that the volume of contracts being arranged for this feature is larger now than at any time since the release of the work. "Sahara" seems to have given Miss Glaum more opportunity for demonstrating her abilities as an emotional artist than any other film she has played in up to the present.

The Kinograms Company points with pride to their recent issue. They claim America Welcoming General Pershing Back from France scored a beat of 3 hours and 15 minutes before the nearest competitor had their issue on the screen.

A late picture of Mary Miles Minter who will soon be seen in a Realart picture, "Anne of Green Gables"

Next Feature for Will Rogers to Be Called "Jubilo"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that the Will Rogers production to follow "Almost a Husband," released fourth in Goldwyn's fall series, will be "Jubilo," written by Ben Ames Williams and directed by Clarence Badger from a scenario prepared by Robert F. Hill. The exact time that "Jubilo" will be issued has not yet been determined.

Judging from reports received from Goldwyn's Culver City studios where the picture was made and where a completed print has been viewed, "'Jublio" is going to be a worthy successor to Will Rogers' first two triumphs as a Goldwyn star, "Laughing Bill Hyde" and "Almost a Husband." Director Badger assembled a particularly strong cast in support of the comedy star, including Josie Sedgwick, Charles French and Willard Louis, and every possibility for humor and sympathy in the appealing story is said to have been realized fully.

Fay Tincher's October Issue Another Western Comedy

"Wild and Western" is the title of the Christie Special two-reel comedy release for the month of October, featuring Fay Tincher with a number of Christie girls. This Special comedy release, according to Al E. Christie who directed it and who is also responsible for the story, is a wildly farcical comedy with a western atmosphere, in which Fay Tincher is allowed to romp and frolic through two speedy reels, much more strenuously than she did in the two previous Christie Specials, "Rowdy Ann," and "Dangerous Man McGrew." These were also laid in a cowboy setting.

Bulls-Eye to Start Two-Reel Comedies at Early Date

The Bulls-Eye Film Corporation will begin shortly on a series of two-reel situation comedies, the star to be one of the best-known light comedy players on the west coast. His name is being kept secret. The name of the director is also being kept secret.

Release of "The Capitol" Early in November

Augustus Thomas's "The Capitol," starring Leah Baird, scheduled for early November release by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is reported to be fast nearing completion at the Artco Studios, Cliffside, N. J., under the direction of George Irving.

Some of the most important scenes of the play were filmed in Washington, and these include actual interiors and exteriors of the national capitol, as well as interiors and exteriors of a senator's home. Among the striking scenes are some of the most beautiful "shots" taken along the Potomac that have ever been pictured.

Undoubtedly "The Capitol" is one of the best plays ever produced under Artco auspices. It has a clean-cut and highly dramatic story. The stage settings are said to be elaborate and costly, far surpassing, according to reports, those used in the stage production of "The Capitol," which years ago was one of the marked successes of two theatrical seasons.

Robert T Haines and Alexander Gaden support Miss Baird in "The Capitol."

Plans for More Lew Cody Features Under Way

Lew Cody has decided to construct his own film vehicles. The first Cody special was written by Louis J. Gasnier, the producer, in collaboration with his star. It will be released under the title of "The Beloved Cheater." The second Cody picture also will be a Cody-Gasnier plot, according to present indications.

The star also plans to make three so-called "society satires" dealing pertinently with the more romantic phases of sex relationship. At the conclusion of these features he intends to film a powerful drama with a purpose. In his ambition Cody is seconded by Gasnier, who believes the new Cody productions will add more victories to the successes already won by his star.

Za Su Pitts to Be Featured as Star in Next Release

Za Su Pitts, who has appeared in several of Robertson-Cole productions, has at last reached the definite status of a recognized star and will be featured as such in a forthcoming Brentwood production. The story is particularly well adapted to the eccentric work of Miss Pitts. In "The Other Half," the Brentwood production following "Better Times," the work of Miss Pitts is reported to have made a deep impression.

Hilliker Takes Charge of the Chester Art Work

Douglas H. Hilliker, well known poster and magazine artist, is back from the war and in charge of the art work of C. L. Chester productions. Hilliker, who was an infantry lieutenant, was put in charge of the direction and scenery production of army plays and pageants as soon as the armistice was signed.

Next Geraldine Farrar Picture

Her Secord for Goldwyn of the New Season "Flame of the Desert" Said to Have Big Settings

AFTER months of work at Goldwyn's Culver City studios, Geraldine Farrar, has completed her second picture for the new season which, according to the announcement made last week by Samuel Goldwyn on his return from the coast, will be called "Flame of the Desert."

The story was written by Charles A. Logue and directed by Reginald Barker. In "Flame of the Desert," Geraldine Farrar is cast as an English noblewoman who falls in love with an Egyptian sheik, and struggles against the barrier of race. As in her last picture "The World and Its Woman," the star has the services of Lou Tellegen, her husband, as leading man. The story is essentially a tale of fundamental love, for Mr. Logue threshed beneath the conventional designs of the modern photoplay to produce a series of situations which develop into passionate love scenes, played as Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen know how to play them.

"Flame of the Desert" is said to have some of the most beautiful and elaborate scenic backgrounds ever screened. One of the sets presents the Pilgrimage of the Holy Carpet, in which natives from every section of Egypt are suposed to traverse the desert to visit the sacred shrine of Hohammet in Cairo. Here caravans of camels, asses and horses are seen trudging across the sands which undulate as they recede in vista to a series of uneven yet monotonous hills that meet the horizon. The effect, in some scenes, is that of an elaborate silhouette; with darkened forms of man and beast moving relentlessly across the screen on their sacred mission; in other scenes, gorgeous masses of color and sunlight flood the desert, the ancient city, and the Egyptian chiefs. Here Lou Tellegen, in his robes of many colored cloths, is resplendent and masterful.

One of the best casts assembled in a Goldwyn picture presents "Flame of the Desert." Among those who contribute important interpretations to the picture besides Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen, are Macey Harlam, Alec Francis, Syne de Conde, Edythe Chapman, Casson Ferguson, Milton Ross, Miles Dobson, Jim Mason, Louis Durham and Ely Stanton.

Lee Kids Playlets Progressing

The First two are Reported to be Practically Complete; Releases Expected Shortly

WHILE definite release date announcement is as yet withheld indications are not lacking of the progress being made with the series of Lee Kids comedy playlets featuring Jane and Katherine of that name. The first two of the series are reported as completed so far as the actual filming of exteriors and interiors is concerned. The Lee children, together with their entourage of director, cast, cameraman and staff are reported to have already made an important excursion to the Southland to secure the proper atmosphere and environment for their "Dixieland Kids," as the second of the features has been temporarily titled. Following their return, other scenes were 'shot' on Long Island, for the two-reeler has to do also with New York and its neighborhood. These first two pictures are now in course of cutting and subtitling.

In the interim before the third picture Jane and Katherine are reported to be assimilating the intricacies of various 'stunts' of a somewhat acrobatic nature, including some trick skating features which, it said, are called for in their next picture. The youngsters are undergoing, according to report, a course of athletic instruction under the direction of a well known expert in preparation for their special role in the next filming.

Report has it that Mr. Rogers of the Rogers Film Corporation, which is producing the series, is completing negotiations with an important large distributing company for the handling of the playlets, as they are respectively forthcoming from the Rogers studios: and that the flood of enquiries that continues to reach that firm for bookings of the diminutives screen favorites will result shortly in the definite announcement of the result of the reported negotiations and the name of the distributing firm selected.

Nat Spitzer, studio manager of Bulls Eye Film Corp., Hollywood.

First Holly One-Reeler is "Don't Scold Your Husband"

The first comedy of the series of twenty-six one-reel laugh producers which the Holly Comedies are producing for distribution by the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation has been titled "Don't Scold Your Husband." Sid Smith, one of the heroes of the 91st Division, who was three times wounded in France, is the star. Smith's principal supports are Madge Kirby and James Parrott.

Detroit Has Triple Show of "The Westerners"

For what is claimed to be the first time in the history of the city of Detroit a motion picture is to play a full week's engagement in three theatres simultaneously. The picture that is to receive this remarkable presentation and exploitation is Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors' picture, "The Westerners," by Stewart Edward White.

"The Westerners" is to be offered simultaneously in the Majestic, Regent and Orpheum theatres, Detroit, by Mr. Miles and his general manager, Tom Eland, backed by every resource of the Miles organization, and this same exhibitor will repeat this presentation with day and date runs in his Miles and Grand theatres, Cleveland, on the W. W. Hodkinson release.

Behind this presentation will be placed the combined advertising and exploitation power of newspapers and billboards and the powerful supplementary assistance of window and book-counter displays under the Grosset and Dunlap publishing link-up in all Detroit department stores.

New Comedian Engaged by Universal

For the past seven or eight years a comedian of originality and talent had been making thousands of New Yorkers laugh, yet a comparatively small portion of the population ever heard of him. His name is Chris Rub, and he has been one of the leading comedy actors at the Irving Place Theatre, Manhattan.

Rub has been engaged by Universal to appear in a series of comedy subjects, and it is predicted that his brand of humor will not only prove entirely new to the screen, but highly effective in chasing the blues and smoothing out the wrinkles of care and worry.

He has already made two short comedy subjects, "Hot Tamale" and "Thirty Minutes in Havana," under the direction of Al Santell.

Argus Advertiser in New York to Plan National Campaign

Lloyd W. Young, advertising expert for Argus Enterprises, producers of Robert McLaughlin's "The House Without Children" is in New York consulting with other experts and planning a nation-wide advertising campaign promoting "The House Without Children."

When interviewed at the Argus headquarters, Mr. Young said: "'The House Without Children' is the first big production ever made by Argus and has proved such an extraordinary success that the executives of the corporation have decided to give it every possible help in the matter of advertising accessories."

Griffith in New York

D. W. Griffith arrived in New York from Los Angeles, October 6. He will immediately begin operations at the new Griffith motion picture studios at Mamaroneck, N. Y.

Flying Scout is Named for Mary Minter

The name of Mary Miles Minter figures prominently as a method of attracting attention to the All-American Pathfinders and Recruiting Unit, U. S. Army Air Service, which has started a tour across the continent to arouse interest in aviation. The name of the Realart star on the fuselage of the scout plane seldom fails to draw comments when the big Curtiss machine alights in a town and the army officers get out and begin asking for the boosters of the community.

Nine big airplanes left Mineola, Long Island, on the trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific and return, the entire air journey to consume a year. Miss Minter was unable to be present and christen the ship named in her honor as she was doing exteriors for her first Realart production, "Anne of Green Gables," at Dedham, Mass., but she had friends there. Realart officials have been quick to see the distinct value of the flight of the Minter plane with the government squad and have launched a campaign of publicity to assist the army and also to flash the name of the star from the air before millions of people in hundreds of cities.

"The Red Virgin" Probably Ready Next Week

B. A. Rolfe is making rapid progress with his production of "The Red Virgin." Most of the interiors have been "shot," and if the present schedule is maintained, the interiors will be finished this week and the company will then go out on location for a week of exterior making, thus winding up the work.

"The Red Virgin" is the first of a series of original stories written by Charles A. Logue. These Logue subjects will be alternately produced with a series of Robert W. Chambers stories, the first one of which, titled "The Amazing Lovers," has already been converted into film form though not yet released.

Wide Advertising Drive for "House Without Children"

A wide advertising and publicity campaign has been mapped out for Robert McLaughlin's "The House Without Children," and includes a number of illustrated dialogues lifted verbatim from the play. The various stages of the plot are so knitted together that scene after scene pyramids to its individual climax, thus permitting the selection of a number of miniature dramas to be used as tabloids for advertising the picture.

Sid Franklin to Direct Constance Talmadge

Sidney Franklin, who for the past few months has been doing directorial work for Mary Pickford, is now back in New York, having just been recalled from the Coast by Mr. Schneck, to direct Constance Talmadge in her next picture. "At the Barn." "At the Barn" is the third of the Constance Talmadge First National series.

Second Hallmark Serial Titled

"The Sign of the Rat" is soon to be Offered, Five Episodes having Arrived at Headquarters

"THE Sign of the Rat" is announced by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation as the second serial to be released by this organization following the final episode of the Hallmark's first serial "The Trail of the Octopus," the sixth episode of which is now running throughout the country.

"The Sign of the Rat", was written, scenarioized and directed by Stuart Paton, whose reputation as a serial director has been established for years. Mr. Paton has taken for his theme a band of noted criminals whose reputation equals that of the famous Camorra gang that terrorized the cities of Italy for years. For his principal characters the author has impersonated a leader of this gang, his lieutenants, a noted criminologist, a girl and her father who are hounded by the gang and the chief of police.

The principal characters of "The Sign of the Rat" are, Harry Carter, in the role of "The Rat"; Claire Anderson, the girl; Joe Girrard, as Gordon the Chief of Police; Boyd Irwin, as Dexter, the Criminologist and Leo Maloney, Dexter's lieutenant.

Prints of the first five episodes of this serial have arrived at the New York office of Hallmark from the Coast and according to those who have seen these episodes. "The Sign of The Rat", marks a new departure in serial production. The mystery element predominates and it is said that the author has sustained a suspense throughout the fifteen episodes that works to an astonishing climax. One of the principal sets used in production and which is prominent throughout the story, is that showing the den of the "Rats", a underground rendevous whose mysterious passages and dens of torture are said to be exact duplicates of those unearthed in Naples during a round-up of the notorious Camorra gang.

The same detailed exploitation campaign will be waged in connection with this serial release as was launched in connection with the campaign on "The Trail of the Octopus", Harry P. Diggs exploitation manager, Hop Hadley, advertising manager and Joseph L. Kelly, publicity director of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, are now at work mapping out a campaign on this serial that will reach the remotest exhibitor and his patrons.

Newspapers Will Exploit Films

"Everybody's Business" to be Published in Newspapers as Fiction Serial—Tie-up is National

W. H. PRODUCTIONS CO. announce that within a short time newspapers in every section of the country will begin publishing in serial form the story of "Everybody's Business," based on the six reel photoplay which is now being sold on the State Rights market by the W. H. Productions Co. The story was written by the well known and popular author H. C. Witwer, whose work appears in many of the leading magazines and newspapers, among which are the American Magazine, Cosmopolitan, Colliers, etc.

In speaking of the scope of this national newspaper tie-up, an official of W. H. Productions Co. says:

"This will be one of the greatest publicity stunts ever put over for a state right picture. The story of the production will be syndicated direct from the New York City office of W. H. Productions Co., and every exchangeman and exhibitor directly will feel the valuable effects of this free publicity. There will be a complete plan of co-operation mapped out for every exchangeman and his exhibitors. When a picture has been booked in a certain city or town, arrangements will immediately be made with the local newspapers for publishing the story. These papers will then run the story periodically, whether daily or weekly, with illustrations and photographs taken from the motion picture itself.

"The story is so constructed that with each succeeding installment a greater and greater interest and curiosity as to the remainder of this absorbing plot is created. Prominent display is given to the fact that the story is based on the production. In addition, the tie-up in the photographs used with the story and those used in advertising the play in the newspapers, is a valuable asset to the advertising."

Cohen, Goldwyn Author, to Meet Studio Staff

Octavus Roy Cohen, who has signed a five-year contract to write photoplays exclusively for Goldwyn, has arrrived at the Culver City studios to confer with the directorial and scenario staff on the production of his first picture for Goldwyn. The production will be a mystery melodrama, but the author has not given it a title as yet.

Mr. Cohen is a prolific writer, and in seven years he has completed no less than 400 short stories and three plays.

Bee Hive Establishes Record

Mr. R. C. Cropper's Chicago Bee Hive Exchange claims to have established a new record for Madison Street in Chicago, during the past three weeks. It began with Texas Guinan in "The She Wolf" playing two consecutive weeks at the Star. "The Mysterious Mr. Browning" opened for four days, first run, at the Alcazar, then playing a repeat date for a solid week, directly across the street at the Star Theatre. Neal Hart in "When the Desert Smiled" went in to the Alcazar as opposition for a week's run.

Woman Will Head a Company

Madam Mureal is President of Mureal Productions, Inc.— Thomas Bedding is Mureal Sales Manager

MADAM MUREAL is the President of Mureal Productions, Inc., capitalized at $100,000. William Baird, a well-known motion picture man who has organized several successful corporations, and who is thoroughly familiar with the details of the business, is Treasurer; Harold W. Jrka is Secretary; Mr. Thomas Bedding takes office in his usual assignment of General Sales Manager. All those identified with the new incorporation in executive and technical capacities are thus thoroughly experienced film people and know the game from A to Z.

Madame Mureal, the President of the new incorporation, is a young woman who achieves her ambition of heading her own motion picture organization early in life. While quite a child, she was trained for the stage and made her first public appearance at the age of nine. Then she went to Italy where she studied singing. Returning to the United States, she had a brilliant career in drama and light opera.

In various studios she has acted as assistant directress, and is the authoress of many original stories and scenarios in which she has lately added to her already great reputation.

Mureal Productions, Inc., has organized a company for the presentation of high-class modern dramas in motion picture form and a complete statement of the company's policy is promised forthwith.

Midnight Matinee Given Film

"Lombardi Ltd" Attracts Throngs to California Theatre, Los Angeles, Necessitating Extra Performance

BERT LYTELL, Screen Classics, Inc., star, was responsible for the first "midnight matinee" motion picture showing to the public ever given in the history of the new California Theatre, in Los Angeles. He did it with his new special production, "Lombardi, Ltd.," released by Metro, and Harry Leonhardt, managing director of the handsome big picture palace, was so pleased over the exploit that he wired the details to Metro's New York offices in the Longacre Building.

Mr. Lytell, on the occasion of the midnight matinee with "Lombardi, Ltd.," appeared in person at the California Theatre, although without any advance advertising. Managing Director Leonhardt, in his telegram to Metro, said: "A midnight matinee was absolutely necessary on the last night of the run of Bert Lytell in the Screen Classic, 'Lombardi, Ltd.,' at the California Theatre. People were still coming in at 10.20. We were therefore obliged to hold a third evening show for the first time in the history of this theatre. Mr. Lytell made an unadvertised personal appearance."

The showing of "Lombardi, Ltd." which is Mr. Lytell's latest picture, adapted by June Mathis from the Oliver Morosco stage success by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, was a pre-release event at the New California Theatre. The Screen Classics, Inc., studios are in Hollywood, a suburb of Los Angeles, and the California obtains the first prints of Screen Classics specials for an exclusive advance showing in the West.

Cast of the "Red Virgin"

B. A. Rolfe and Chester DeVonde are again working together in the staging of the latest Rolfe production, "The Red Virgin," which is to be presented through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

The cast includes Diana Allen, Sally Crute, Eugene Strong, Marc McDermott, John L. Shine, Gordon H. Standing and James S. Ryan.

Well-Known Comedians Are Engaged by Lehrman

Henry Lehrman, producer of Lehrman Comedies for distribution by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announced this week the engagement of a number of well-known comedians to appear in his first release in support of Lloyd (Ham) Hamilton.

Prominent among those engaged as aids to Mr. Hamilton is Harry Todd, the well-known "Mustang Pete" of the old Snakeville comedies. Harry McCoy is another well-known comedian just placed under contract. McCoy has for years been featured with leading comedy companies, and was formerly under Mr. Lehrman's direction in the Sunshine organization. "Rube" Miller, a director and player in the comedy field, is another recruit to the Hamilton Company. Charlie Dorety, recently featured in a series of comedy productions, is also seen in a prominent role in the Lehrman Company.

Monroe Salisbury Is Supported By Good Cast in Latest

Exhibitors will find in the latest Monroe Salisbury feature, "His Divorced Wife," a picture that contains all the elements necessary to please the most diversified and exacting tastes of the moving picture audience. The picture depicts a struggle between love for wife and child and duty to a fellowman who has shielded them from the sting of bitter slander. The theme gives rise to a succession of situations that vibrate with dramatic intensity.

Monroe Salisbury plays the role of the blacksmith. He is adequately supported by a strong cast which includes Charles West, Charles LeMoyne, Alfred Allen, Alice Eliot, Raymond Gallagher and little Mickey Moore. The picture was directed by Douglas Gerrard. The scenario was adapted from the magazine story of Elmer Elliott Peake, originally published under the title, "An Altar on Little Thunder."

Elsie Ferguson Will Star in Pinero's Paramount Film

"His House in Order," one of the most celebrated plays by the famous English playwright, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, has been chosen as Elsie Ferguson's next Paramount-Artcraft subject. Miss Ferguson has already started the new production at Famous Players-Lasky's Fifty-Sixth studio under the direction of Hugh Ford, the screen adaptation having been made by Margaret Turnbull and Kathyrn Stuart.

Oakley Super-Quality, Inc., Begins Work

Production of the first Oakley Super-Quality Productions, Inc., motion pictures began October 6th at the Norbig studios in Edendale. According to James W. Early, managing director of Super-Quality, the Norbig plant has been thoroughly renovated and improved. Three directors and a large cast of players has been engaged. The new company will film satires, western dramas and society pictures.

Louis Bennison Backed by a Capable Cast

Louis Bennison, the Betzwood-Goldwyn star, whose latest picture, "A Misfit Earl," is ready for distribution through the Goldwyn exchanges, is fortunate in having surrounded himself with a cast that knows how to act without rehearsing each scene in minute detail.

Claire Adams, a young and experienced player, has the leading feminine role. Miss Adams has played with Edison, Famous Players and Betzwood.

Herbert Standing is a well-known actor who has played on the stage with the late Sir Henry Irving and Sir Charles Wyndham. He has also appeared in the support of the best-known film stars, including Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford. An unusual bit of child-acting is furnished by six-year-old Samuel Ross.

Ida Waterman, whose statuesque beauty is well known to film enthusiasts, plays the part of a grande dame in "A Misfit Earl" with poise and fidelity. Charles Brandt, Barbara Allen and Neil Moran complete a well-chosen and competent cast.

Gossip of the United Picture Theatres

H. E. Ellison, who has been called one of the most progressive exhibitors of the Western States and who has been a member of the United Pictures Theatres since the inauguration of that organization, is now serving with the United Advisory Board.

United's Boston manager, S. W. Hand has now completed the re-organization of his sales force. Wm. L. Jennings will have charge of the Vermont and Western Massachusetts section of the Boston territory, Earl L. Tinker will cover Maine and New Hampshire, and Daniel O'Leary has charge of Rhode Island and part of Connecticut.

Jack O'Toole has been promoted by J. A. Berst to the charge of the Chicago Office for United, and Steve O'Brien, who has been an active salesman in the Minneapolis section, has received promotion to be manager of that district.

Rolin Film Head Here About Lloyd Comics

Hal E. Roach, President of the Rolin Film Corporation, was in New York last week on an important mission. Mr. Roach's stay was brief, but he accomplished much in the three days he was here.

One of the chief objects of Mr. Roach's transcontinental journey was to discuss with Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., his plans for future production of the $100,000 Lloyd two-reel comedies.

Metro Again to Produce in East

Signs Renewal of Lease on Studio Near Central Park; Increased Production Main Reason

METRO Pictures Corporation announces the renewal of the lease, for an indefinite period, on its studios at No. 3 West Sixty-first street, overlooking Central Park. This action is construed as a promise that Metro will resume the maintenance of two immense production plants, one in the East and one in the West.

For about a year Metro has produced exclusively in the West, at its new million-dollar studios in Hollywood, California. The New York studios were sub-leased to other producing companies after the entire activities of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., as well as the Nazimova productions, were transferred to the Pacific coast last fall.

Metro's westward trek was a move to anticipate a serious winter in New York, with a coal scarcity and Government restrictions upon the use of fuel by motion picture studios made necessary by the state of war that then existed.

The signing of a new lease on the Columbus Circle studios by Metro now indicates that the near future will witness dual activities by the corporation such as were in operation before the war exigencies forced its complete removal of production facilities to sunny California.

Simultaneous production in the East and West would follow naturally as a result of Metro's enlarged activities. It was carried out successfully and without the slightest friction before the handicaps of war interfered.

Metro officials, have always recognized the advantages of producing in New York, which balances the slightly lower cost of Western production by greater accessibility to the market, a closer touch with more of the finest actors of the stage and screen, and a more intimate working connection between the producing and the executive departments of the motion picture company.

The location of the Metro studios in the metropolis, in the heart of the theatrical district and overlooking Central Park, is particularly desirable.

The "Round-Up" Will Be State Righted, Says Cohen

Sixteen thousand feet of film depicting the 1919 Pendleton, Ore., "Round-Up," which closed September 20th, has reached the Hollywood laboratories of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation. On account of the heavy demand for the "Round-Up" pictures, according to Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bulls-Eye, the films will be state righted, and will not be used to augment the Sunset-Burrud "Legends of the Wilderness" scenics, as was previously announced.

The exclusive right to film the "Round-Up" was granted to L. J. Burrud, chief cinematographer of the "legends," through the efforts of the Sunset Magazine. No other motion pictures of this exent were permitted to be taken.

"Mickey" Distribution

A story sent by a correspondent to the effect that "Mickey" is released throughout Ohio through the Ohio Film Classic meets with a denial by Supreme Photoplay Productions, which claims distribution for Southern Ohio of this production. Art Meyer is manager of the latter concern.

Film Outlook Good on All Sides

Fred Quimby of Pathe Finds Most Encouraging Situation in a Recent Trip Through Entire Country

FRED C. QUIMBY, Director of Exchanges for Pathe Exchange, Inc., strikes an optimistic note in reporting motion picture conditions, both from the distributors' and the exhibitors' points of view, as he found them on his recent tours which have taken him to every section of the United States.

A few weeks ago Mr. Quimby made a tour of the Pathe Exchanges from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, also visiting nearly 300 of the foremost exhibitors on his travels. Soon after his return he journeyed back as far as Kansas City. Then he traveled New York State and last week gave the Washington situation a careful survey.

Everywhere Mr. Quimby found prospects superb for a record-breaking season for the motion picture.

"Take the big cities where the leading legitimate theatres were affected by the actors and stage-hands strike," said Mr. Quimby. "It was only a brief period that the public of these cities were compelled to go without their theatrical entertainment, but in that short span of time, the motion picture gained more admirers than ordinarily it would in a year. Fortunately for the film industry, the finest type of pictures was exhibited in the strike cities, which in itself had something to do with the small army of amusement lovers who have turned to the silent drama for their entertainment and now can be classed among the regular patrons of the screen theatres.

"Throughout the West, conditions were particularly promising. It is natural to expect that the undercurrent of unrest, as exemplified by the steel strike, the Omaha riots, and more recently the Gary outbreak, would have a tendency to decrease theatre going. But on the contrary the opposite is the rule. Exhibitors whom I have visited and during my various trips I saw the biggest and most influential men in the business, inform me that they never enjoyed such big patronage as they have to-day.

"Their cry is for better pictures, and a majority of those I met agree with me that they are getting them.

"The growth of the Pathe Feature Department, with the addition of several high-class stars, and producers whose works are standard, and not uncertainties, has been particularly noticed by exhibitors.

Mid-West Prosperity Surprises

Al Lichtman of F. P.-Lasky on an Inspection Tour Finds Business Leap as High as 400 Per Cent

ON the first lap of his tour of inspection of the Middle West territory, Al Lichtman, general manager of F. P.-Lasky exudes optimism over the conditions he has found generally prevailing. In Cincinnati Mr. Lichtman said:

"I have never witnessed anything like it," said Mr. Lichtman. "Theatres are enjoying a prosperity undreamed of. Business is 100, 200, 300 per cent greater than ever before. The public is insistent in its demand for better photoproductions and where these are given the public is showing its appreciation. Patronage is absolutely tremendous. Building operations are on a scale that astounds even me. Thousands of theatres are under construction — fine, beautiful theatres that do credit to the silent art. The success of the screen is being worked out not only in dollars, but in higher standards from all angles. Theatres are being built that are veritable monuments to the industry, typifying the high ideals of those laboring to make the moving picture realize its fullest possibilities.

"Speaking for our own company, I find that Artcraft-Paramount pictures have enjoyed a greater demand than ever before. So far, on the new season's contracts every exchange reports business 150 to 350 per cent ahead of this time last year. This is a pleasant fact, to me, because it shows that our efforts to improve our productions are gaining recognition.

"I am finding conditions at our various exchanges to be splendid. Our efforts to give perfect service, in all departments, are reflected in the wonderful spirit of co-operation between our exchanges and their exhibitors."

Three Months to Complete "Bound and Gagged"

After three months of the hardest kind of work, George B. Seitz has completed the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Bound and Gagged," of which he is producer, director and star, and which will be released on October 26th.

This establishes what it is believed is a new speed record in serial production. "Bound and Gagged" is a ten-episode serial, with three reels in the first episode and two in each succeeding episode, a total of twenty-one reels. Work was started by Mr. Seitz on July 1st, and the last episode completely finished was turned over to Pathe Exchange, Inc., on October 1st, making an average of one episode a week.

Marguerite Courtot is Signed for Serials

Marguerite Courtot, who plays the Princess Istra, the leading feminine role in the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Bound and Gagged," of which George B. Seitz is producer, director and star, last week signed a contract to appear in serials for Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the next year.

Miss Courtot is a newcomer in the serial field, "Bound and Gagged" being her first venture into the realm of the continued form of screen entertainment.

Hallmark Pictures Acquire the Chaplin Re-issues

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, through a deal closed this week with Clark Cornelius Corporation, acquires the exclusive distributing rights to a series of twelve Chaplin re-issues, the first of which, "The Floorwalker," was released October 4th. This series of Chaplin's will be released through the newly-acquired Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation's exchanges, which will be known as Hallmark Exchanges, on and after Monday, October 13th.

The Chaplin re-issues, passing to Hallmark Pictures Corporation, are: "The Floorwalker," released, last week; "The Fireman," "The Vagabon," "One A. M.," "The Count," "The Pawnshop," "Behind The Screen," "The Rink," "The Immigrant," "The Adventurer," "The Cure" and "Easy Street."

Luxurious Settings a Feature of Fox's "Eastward Ho"

"Eastward Ho," the William Macleod Raine story which Emmett J. Flynn is directing for Fox Film Corporation with William Russell as the star, will set a new mark for richness of sets and of gowns according to Fox statements. Many of the scenes are laid in the home of a millionaire who has made his millions but a short time before, and who therefore spends money with a lavish hand.

Fifth avenue modistes furnished the latest Paris creations for the women who appear in the reception scene. The dancers for the scene were coached by Dorothy Dickson and Carl Hyson, whose stage success has been the talk of the town. Miss Dickson and Mr. Hyson appear in the picture, and their dance is one of the features.

Paramount Feature at the Rialto

A novel situation, rich in amusing possibilities, is set forth in the new Paramount-Artcraft photo-play. "His Official Fiancee," in which Vivian Martin was seen the past week at the Rialto.

In addition to the feature the program includes Mack Sennett's latest comedy, "Back to the Kitchen," a second installment of Paul Rainey's "Heart of the Jungle" and the Rialty Magazine.

Excellent orchestral selections were rendered.

"The Joyous Liar" is Scheduled for Early Issue

"The Joyous Liar," the newest Robert Brunton production, is scheduled for an early release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The feature of the new production is said to be the fine character delineation of the veteran actor, Joseph J. Dowling, who assumes the serio-comic role of William Warren, an amateur criminologist. Mr. Kerrigan's characterization in the present work is reported to eclipse all of his past achievements.

Special Service Section on
Frank Mayo in "The Brute Breaker"

GENERAL SUMMARY OF THE FILM

If your patrons enjoy pictures of the Northwest which have been typified by such productions as "The Barrier," "The Sign Invisible" and others, where the incidents of the drama are photographed amid beautiful scenery with much that is typical of the life in the lumbering country, they will like this latest picture, "The Brute Breaker" in which Frank Mayo plays the role of a French Canadian whose mission in life for the time being is to "break brutes" meaning to thrash the bullies of logging camps.

As may be imagined the feature is largely a succession of fistic encounters, the star flogging no less than four giants in his career of brute breaking.

The love interest is supplied in the romance of the young Canuck and the daughter of one of the camp bosses. Complications in the story are injected by the machinations of the four bully villains who after being whipped in the usual primitive woods fashion, resort to various forms of strategy in an effort to defeat the hero by fair means or foul, with the principal heavy casting a lustful eye on the one fair maiden of the camp.

The picture is very largely a made to order production with the hero being further heroized as the sequences are shown and carries little suspense in the plot itself but it has an unusual number of interest compelling scenes which include each of the four "scraps," a ride in a canoe down the rapids of a river, and a forest fire that certainly must have been the real thing in view of the fact that no blaze of its size would ever be permitted in these days just for the sake of adding realism to a picture.

Kathryn Adams is the blond heroine of the story, Harry Northrup is the deepest dyed of the villians and also the least convincing when considered physically. The three other bullies, all very good types, are Bert Sprotte, Frank Brownlee and Charles Le Moyne. Jack Curtis plays the role of the camp boss and there are a lot of smaller parts which are well played by correct types.

Master Burell Hamerick plays the role of a cripple boy in sequences incidental to the main thread of the story.

The picture is in six reels with ——— ——— directing. Reduced to the theme the picture concerns the efforts of Louis Graintaire, the owner of a chain of lumber camps traveling incognito, to drive the bully of each camp into the forest by personally whipping each one in a fistic encounter.

In so doing he meets and falls in love with Annette Bosseut, daughter of the foreman of one of the camps and finally wins her, an obliging priest coming down the river about the time the two young people are ready for the wedding.

AT A GLANCE

Story — Romantic drama of the North woods with much action and many exciting moments.

Star — Frank Mayo in the role of a French Canadian.

Support — Harry Northrup, Frank Brownlee, Charles Le Moyne, Kathryn Adams and others.

Locale — A lumber camp, the forest and a river.

Length — Six reels.

AS a Canadian Northwest soldier of fortune, unknown to the lumbermen of the section, Louis Graintaire arrives at a logging camp at the foot of the "Rapids Deserted of God" on the day of the village feast and dance. His arrival is dramatic for he rides the rapids supposedly impassable in a canoe. At the camp the holiday games are in progress but Louis declines to join in the festivities except to demonstrate his superior strength by hurling a great rock with which other strong men have struggled in vain, as if it were half its weight.

At the dance the same night, Louis forces Annette, lovely daughter of the camp, to dance with him thereby incurring her hatred, as she believes, and the undying enmity of the camp bully, Baptiste Navet, who had been refused a dance by Annette as a punishment for plaguing a cripple boy of the camp during the feast day.

The enmity between Louis and Navet increases as time progresses and the time comes when it is known throughout the camp that the two will fight in the approved fashion of the woodsmen code, with bare fists.

However, before the day of the battle, Louis leaves the camp taking with him the little cripple. His disappearance is viewed by some as an acknowledgment that he feared Baptiste, and by others that he had "The Brutebreaker" is a story of the lumbering camps in which bullies of the timber country are broken by owner of the lumbering company who travels incognito.

The scenic vesture of "The Brutebreaker" forms a beautiful background for its strong dramatic action.

Tell Them This Has Action And Thrills

kidnapped the boy for some personal reason. Annette shares in the latter view.

With Louis gone, Baptiste renews his attention to Annette but she refuses him. In the meantime three other bullies have come to the camp having been advised that Louis Graintaire is there. Their reason for coming is revenge for it becomes known that Louis has whipped and driven from their camps, each of the three men.

With four bullies in one camp peace naturally could not exist for long and the four men start fighting among themselves. In the battle, Navet is burned about the hands when one of the fighters knocks him into the flames of the open fire place.

Louis returns from his mysterious trip and finds the four bullies, three of whom he has already whipped once, in the camp. They fear him but urged on by the crafty Navet, they attempt his life not in the open but at night trying to shoot him as he lies asleep in front of his camp fire. Louis however outwits them, threshes them a second time and throws them into the river below.

While Louis has been deposing of his enemies, Navet despairing to win Annette by fair means, has taken advantage of an opportunity presented by the fact that all the men are away in the woods, to possess the girl by force. She fights him and succeeds in protecting herself for the time being.

An Indian girl runs to tell Louis what is happening and Louis starts to the rescue. Before he arrives, however, Navet has set fire to the forest and all three persons are hemmed in by the flames except by means of the river.

The two men fight for supremacy and Navet is beaten to unconsciousness. Then Louis again runs the rapids in his canoe taking Annette with him.

Annette tells her father of Louis' achievements, how he had brought her down the rapids, how he had threshed the four bullies and finally that she loves him.

A canoe appears in the river and in it are a priest and the little cripple boy. Explanations follow. Louis is the owner of the camp, and he left with the cripple boy that he might have medical treatment and be made well.

COMPARSIONS AND OPINIONS

IN making a comparison for this picture with something previously produced, it of course resembles all the pictures released depicting life in the lumber camps.

It does not come up to the standard of "The Barrier" because it lacks in story quality. Really it is more like the almost forgotten short subjects of some five years ago when action was of first importance in every picture produced.

As to the pleasing qualifications of this feature, it will depend entirely on the patronage on an average of the house which plays it. If they like 'em with action, and are interested in realistic scraps, and can get thrills out of forest fires and holds their breath on scenes like the one where the canoe runs the rapids, then this will go for one of the best ever. If they don't like "rough stuff" then they are pretty apt to view this as cheap melodrama as brutal as its name suggests. The exhibitor knows what his patrons like and can judge whether or not he wishes to play this picture.

Frank Mayo as the hero is good. He looks as if he might be a tough customer in a "scrap" and the whole cast have worked hard to make the action convincing. Harry Northrup as you may know is a first class heavy. He doesn't look big enough or brutal enough to carry out the idea of the role he is playing but he plays the part well and puts over his fight scenes.

ADVERTISING ANGLES

There isn't but one advertising angle to this picture unless you figure that Frank Mayo, Northrup and the cast are worthy of good billing, and that is the fighting. You can promise your patrons that this is a succession of scraps that compare very well with that memorable one in "The Spoilers."

"The Brute Breaker" as a title will naturally suggest what the picture is about so our advice is to follow this lead, telling them that the hero is a regular "he" man.

You might call attention to some very nice out doors shots in photography but as the interest that scenic stuff has with people is in direct variance with the principal feature of this story, the action, we would pass that angle up.

You can use the stills to advantage on this subject. There are a lot of good ones most of which will give people the full idea as to the prize fight qualities this feature has.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY ADVICE

USE of the producer's cuts on this picture is especially advised as they impress us as being rather above the ordinary. With a good cut as a basis, frame your ad in a melodramatic language using some good selling talk.

For catch lines we suggest something like these:

"Down the rapids 'Deserted of God' came the ————."

"He handled a canoe like an Indian.—He fought like a tiger.—He made love like a Spaniard, this stranger who bore the title of ————."

"'Fight Bully' 'Fight Coward,' 'Fight Beater of Crippled Boys," shouted ————."

For selling talk something like this is suggested:

"From out of the North came a stranger, tall, debonair, a mysterious individual and following him came a story tnat he lived but to clear the lumber camps of "bullies." What he did for one camp, before it became known that he was its owner and how he found a romance with a pretty daughter of the forest, is an interesting, exciting and absorbing story. Handsome Frank Mayo is the hero in the role of a picturesque Canadian."

"The Other Half" Reported as a Great Success

As predicted by the trade paper reviewers and all who saw the picture in its pre-release showings, "The Other Half" released by Robertson-Cole is going over in splendid fashion throughout the country, according to officials of the Robertson-Cole Company. In industrial centers where labor troubles are prevalent an enormous number of bookings have been made and wherever it has been shown, it has met with popular approval.

The theory that there "can be no sentiment in business" and that corporations must be managed with an eye to profits alone and the absolute disregard of the workers is exposed as a fallacy in the picture and yet the theme is worked out in such a smooth and broad way that it has as great an appeal to large employers of labor as it has to the working man and woman.

Aside from this definite theme it carries such a deep moral lesson that it is making a very strong impression. In many of the communities in which it has been shown, prominent citizens and in many cases clergymen have been invited to see it and have stamped it with their approval.

Marguerite Clark Leads in "Easy To Get"

Exterior scenes are being taken at Loon Lake, N. Y., in the Adirondacks for "Easy To Get," by Mann Page, Marguerite Clark's first Paramount-Artcraft picture to be made in the East since her return from California several days ago, after having made five pictures there. Walter Edwards, who directed all of Miss Clark's Coast pictures, was brought East especially for this picture.

Harrison Ford, leading man for Miss Clark in Clyde Fitch's "Girls," which was produced on the Coast, also came here from California to play opposite Miss Clark. Other members of the cast are Rodney La Rocque, as Dick Elliot, Herbert Barrington, Helen Montrose, Julia Hurley and Kid Broad, prizefighter, who personates an escaped convict.

Is De Mille's Best Production

F. P.-Lasky Officials Predicting "Male and Female" Will be Judged Even Better Than "The Miracle Man"

CECIL B. DEMILLE has accomplished the greatest achievement of his career in "Male and Female," his latest Super-Special Production for Paramount–Artcraft, according to an announcement from that office. A print of this nine-reel picture, which was in course of production for nearly five months and involved a greater amount of detail and a greater outlay of money than any other production ever made by Mr. DeMille, arrived in New York a few days ago and was shown to the executives and the members of the Publicity and Advertising Department of the Famous Players–Lasky Corporation.

"This is DeMille's best — one of the finest productions of all time," was Adolph Zukor's comment.

"A marvelous piece of work. The lavishness of production, the attention to detail and the forceful manner in which the story, especially its satirical phases, is developed — all these things grow on one amazingly as scene after scene is unfolded," said Jesse L Lasky, First Vice-President in Charge of Production, who did not fail to give due praise also to Jeanie MacPherson, who was responsible for the scenario.

"It will be a box-office super sensation." was the laconic remark of Walter E. Greene, Vice-President in Charge of Distribution.

Adapted from "The Admirable Crichton," "Male and Female" is the first work of Sir James Barrie to be made into a feature photoplay.

Notable casts have always been outstanding features of Cecil B. DeMille's productions, but in choosing those to enact the roles in "Male and Female" he is said to have fairly outdone himself. Thomas Meighan, in the role of Crichton, the butler extraordinary, will duplicate, it is predicted, the success which he has achieved as Tom Burke in "The Miracle Man." Gloria Swanson has the role of Lady Mary Lasenby, the lord's daughter who falls in love with Crichton. Lila Lee, Paramount–Artcraft star, is seen as Lady Mary's servant-maid rival and Mildred Reardon as Lady Mary's younger sister. Theodore Roberts, as the father and head of the house, has a splendid character part. And then there are Raymond Hatton, Julia Faye, Robert Cain, Bebe Daniels, Wesley Barry, Edna Mae Cooper, Guy Oliver, Edward Burns and other almost equally well known.

The several excellent qualities which have distinguished Mr. DeMille's former productions are said to have reached their fullest development here. That he hitherto has done nothing to compare with "Male and Female" as a whole is what Famous Players–Lasky maintains. In his society dramas, "For Better, For Worse," "Don't Change Your Husband," and the others, he exhibited delicacy of handling the luxurious and opulent in drama such as never before had been displayed.

Exploiting "Blind Husbands"

Extensive Plans For Exploiting Production Whose Estimated Cost Amounts to $125,000

ELABORATE plans for exploiting "Blind Husbands," the first super-production written, directed and played by Eric Stroheim, are being made by the Universal, and exhibitors are promised a line of paper which will set a new standard of excellence. A complete line of posters of four one sheets, two three sheets, one six sheet, two twenty-four sheets, two designs of window cards and half sheets are now being made.

In making plans for securing the very best line of paper, great care was taken by Universal. The poster artist competition was held and twenty-five of the most prominent artists in New York submitted sketches. Out of this number four were given prizes, and these four designs are used for the principal posters. Other sketches were bought from the competing artists, which are being used.

Eric Stroheim who wrote, directed and played the principal heavy role in this production was formerly an officer in the Austrian army. In "Blind Husbands" he gives a splendid exposure of the foppishness of the Teutonic military caste. The story, which Stroheim has been working on for years, is said to have been taken from an actual happening in the mountainous country of Austria and Italy. Naturally, there are many mountain scenes which were made in picturesque California. An estimate of the cost of the production is conservatively placed at $125,000.

Supporting Stroheim is an excellent cast, the principals of which are Sam DeGrasse, Francelia Billington, H. Gibson-Gowland, Valeria Germonprez and Jack Perrin.

Peggy Hyland and Good Cast in Fox Special

Peggy Hyland, Fox Star, has completed her work in "A Girl in Bohemia" at the West Coast Studio of Fox Film Corporation. Miss Hyland, as Winifred Bryce, has one of the best roles of her career, it is said.

The story of "A Girl in Bohemia" comes from the pen of H. B. Daniel. Denison Clift made the scenario. The direction of the picture was in the hands of Howard M. Mitchell.

Joseph Swickard, as Professor Bryce, and L. C. Shumway, as Richard Haldane, support Miss Hyland. Betty Shade, Edward Cecil, Melbourne McDowell and Winter Hall are also in the cast.

"A Girl in Bohemia" is a story of New York's Bohemian set.

Forty Plays Now Available for Non-Theatrical Distribution

Forty famous photoplays are immediately available for non-theatrical distribution, according to an announcement made this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Included in the list are films of historical romance, of fairy lore for children and adults, humorous pictures and productions based on famous books.

Featured in these pictures are nearly all of the leading stars. The old-time fairy tale "Cinderella," starring Mary Pickford, heads the roll of releases. Another picture of similar charm is "Snow White," starring Marguerite Clark.

The list presents an outline of the policy to be enacted in the release of photoplays for non-theatrical distribution in city, town, village and settlement. Other pictures are constantly being added to the list, so that a never ending supply can stress into the offices of the non-theatrical exchanges throughout the country. Before another week has passed it is estimated that some 200 photoplays will have been made available for this distribution.

"Back To God's Country," a First National Making Records

"Back to God's Country," which is being distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is said to be having a successful run both in Washington, D. C., and Detroit, Mich.

At Tom Moore's Garden Theatre, Washington, D. C., "Back to God's Country" is now playing its second week, and, according to reports, the flow of steady patronage has led to the belief that it will break all records for this theatre. At the Adams Theatre, Detroit, Mich., "Back to God's Country" played, it is said, to a gross business of $3,200 on the opening day. This would establish a record for the Adams house.

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" Will Star J. Barrymore

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Robert Louis Stevenson's fiction classic and the greatest of all stories ever written on the theme of dual personality, is about to be produced for Paramount-Artcraft with John Barrymore in the stellar role. The scenario has been prepared by Clara Beranger and the production will soon be started under direction of John S. Robertson at one of Famous Players-Lasky's New York studios.

Progressing Rapidly on Kay Laurell's Production

Kay Laurell, who is now working in the first picture by her own company under the direction of Jack O'Brien, formerly director for Mary Pickford, Virginia Pearson and others, is completing the fourth week of production. The working title to her first picture is "Lonely Hearts," the screen version of a play by a well-known American playwright and producer.

Blanche Sweet, a Garson Equity star.

Equity Opens up Exchanges at Frisco and Los Angeles

The Equity Pictures Company announces the opening of the Equity Pictures Company offices at 1014-1016 Hewes Building, 995 Market street, San Francisco. This office will distribute Clara Kimball Young productions and Harry Garson specials, under franchise from the Equity Pictures Corporation of New York City, in the States of California, Arizona, Nevada and in Hawaii. The Los Angeles office is located at 738 South Olive street.

Mr. Chas. Mark Thall, who has been appointed branch manager at San Francisco, was George Kleine's manager in Minneapolis for three years, while Mr. Frank Powers is in charge at Los Angeles.

To Reproduce "Grace Darling's Talks to Girls"

A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., has obtained permission from the International Feature Service, Inc., to reproduce "Grace Darling's Talks to Girls," a series of thirteen feature articles written by Grace Darling and published in the New York Evening Journal, for use as publicity copy for "The Amazing Lovers," in which Miss Darling plays the ingenue lead.

The articles will be printed in the exhibitors' service book issued as an exhibitorial aid in behalf of the picture, and are arranged for reproduction either in newspapers or in pamphlet form. Cuts of portraits of Miss Darling will be available to illustrate each article of the series.

Universal Feature Sets a High Admission Price Scale

All attendance records were shattered and a precedent established at the New Unique Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., last week, at the first showing of "The Right to Happiness," Universals superproduction, starring Dorothy Phillips and directed by Allen Holubar.

On the first day this picture was shown to more than 6,000 people and there was at least 2,000 turned away unable to secure seats.

This is the first time a motion picture has played to admission prices ranging as high as $1.50 in this city.

Neilan and Company off to Montana for Work

Marshall Neilan, accompanied by his entire producing organization, including Mahlon Hamilton, Marjorie Daw, Lewis Stone and little Wesley Barry, will leave the Hollywood studio this week for Glacier Park, Montana, where the exterior scenes, including the spectacular Custer battle, for "The Eternal Three," will be staged.

All preparatory work for the production of this film has now been completed, and several carloads of paraphernalia which will be used in staging this offering, have already been shipped to Montana. This will mark Mr. Neilan's initial work as an independent producer. "The Eternal Three," adapted from Randall Parrish's famous book, "Bob Hampton of Placer," is his first picture to be produced by his own organization and is scheduled for release through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Fine Cast in "Tin Pan Alley"

Among the capable players chosen for the cast in support of Albert Ray and Elinor Fair in their newest William Fox Excel picture, a comedy-drama entitle "Tin Pan Alley," is Kate Price, a character comedienne of long established reputation in motion pictures. Another notable member of the Ray-Fair company is George Hernandez, who has a unique character part.

Besides Kate Price and Mr. Hernandez, the principals include Louis Natho, Frank Weed and the pretty Ardite Mellonio. Further, in connection with this story of "Tin Pan Alley" the director, Frank Beal, will use many extra people, each selected with a view to characters found in the locale of the play.

Mabel Normand in Role of Rough-Rider in New Film

Mabel Normand is now busily engaged in her first Western characterization for Goldwyn. The picture, which is being made under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, reveals for the first time on the screen Miss Normand's skill at riding and calls for a number of risky stunts on horseback.

Mable Normand has been a prominent figure on the screen since the earliest days of moving pictures. She has taken risks repeatedly in the making of films, and has run the gamut of characterization from scullery maid to society queen; yet this is only the second time in her entire career that she has been given a Western story.

The Mayflower Photoplay Buys Fauley's "Jenny Be Good"

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation announce that they have acquired the screen rights to Wilbur Wiley Fauley's latest story "Jenny Be Good," published by Britton. Mr. Fauley is the Social Editor of the New York Times, and consequently the producers feel that they have secured quite a bit of realistic atmosphere as well as an excellent story, and that the combination should give unusually good results.

Century Comedies That Are in the Making

Vin Moore, the director, is making a side splitting comedy entitled "Fat Boarders and Lean Lions" for the Century Comedy Company. It is the story of the arrival of a barn stormer troupe in a small town, but still the comedy is bristling with novel twists and turns. The great lions of the Century Comedies are personally handled by Charles Gay, under Director Moore's direction, and inasmuch as Gay was for years the right-hand man to Frank Bostock, the animal king, the excellence of the work of the east is an assured fact.

Jess Robbins has started a new rural comedy after finishing his "Charlie in Society," a two reeler, featuring Chai, the Chinese comedian. in an odd comedy with a lot of new situations. In the bucolic production Chai will portray the trials and tribulations of an oriental coolie among strangers. Louise Fortune plays the ingenue.

A Good Line-Up for "The Cup Of Fury," Goldwyn

"The Cup of Fury," an Eminent Authors production from the book by Rupert Hughes, is a picture which contains an able cast that has been carefully selected, according to reports. The feature has been made at the Goldwyn studios.

The cast includes Helene Chadwick, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Sydney Ainsworth, Clarissa Selwynne, Kate Lester, Herbert Standing, Frank Leigh, Florence Deshon, Dwight Crittenden, H. A. Morgan and Marion Colvin.

First Paramount — Truex Comedy Released Nov. 2

Ernest Truex, star of the Paramount-Truex Comedies, produced by the Ay-VeeBee Corporation and distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has completed his first Paramount release, "Stick Around." The picture is based on a short story written by P. G. Wodehouse, the well-known short story writer and playwright, and will be the first Paramount-Truex release, being set down for November 2d.

Constance Binney stars for Realart in "Erstwhile Susan."

Campbell Joins Famous Players

Major Maurice Campbell Turns His Talents to Pictures — is Now in Los Angeles Learning Technique

ONE of the most noted producing figures of the spoken stage, Major Maurice Campbell, has turned his talents and experiences over to the motion picture art and is an active member of the Famous Players-Lasky producing forces at the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

Major Campbell is now with Cecil B. De Mille, assisting the Director-General of Famous Players-Lasky and learning the technique of motion picture production. Though he has devoted the last twenty years of his life to the drama, this is his first contact with shadowland. He laughingly admits that the closest he has ever come to a motion picture camera has been to pay his dues as a member of the Camera Club in New York for a score of years.

Major Campbell, who is Henrietta Crosman's husband, was first a newspaperman. He was war correspondent for the New York Herald during the Spanish-American War, but a spat with his city editor induced him to give up newspaper work and make his bow in the theatrical world.

His first star was May Irwin. In 1900, he produced "Mistress Nell" for his wife, Henrietta Crosman. In 1908 he joined with Henry Harris and the two produced "The Christian Pilgrim," dramatized from "Pilgrim's Progress." Major Campbell spent two years in that work, and the finished product was an artistic success. Among Major Campbell's own plays that were best known were "The Almighty Dollar," "Where There's a Will" and "Thou Shalt Not Kill."

The noted stage producer went in the army in July, 1917, being commissioned as a captain. In July of 1918 he went overseas.

Major Campbell was in the big offensives and in the latter part of November he accompanied the fourth division up to the Rhine. In January of this year he was commissioned major. In June he left for home.

Harold Lloyd Writes About His Late Accident

In a letter to the Home Office at Pathe Exchange, Inc., Harold Lloyd, star of the new $100,000 special two-reel comedies, to be released by Pathe, tells in his own words the story of the accidental explosion that nearly ended his career as a screen comedian. He wrote:

"The way this accident occurred was through the carelessness of some one connected with the property room, mixing real bombs up with other props and sham bombs. Frank Ferry innocently picked this bomb from among other props, to use in a still picture of me lighting my cigarette with a bomb.

"I had the bomb up before my face, in position to light the cigarette, when by chance, I noticed that the fuse had burned low, and was not going to register well in picture. So, lowering the bomb from my face to an angle of about 50 degrees, I told Ferry he had better put in a new fuse. But just at that moment it exploded.

"Had the bomb been before my face then, well, I wouldn't be writing to you now."

"Tell my picture friends all that I shall soon be back."

"Desert Gold" Gets Double Run

Has Already Scored in Pittsburgh

Continued Successes

THE first Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner Zane Grey picture, "Desert Gold," gets off with a bang in Western Pennsylvania with day and date first runs in Pittsburgh at the Minerva Theatre downtown and at the Rowland and Clark Regent Theatres, followed by dates in the entire Rowland and Clark chain of theatres. In being booked for simultaneous showings in the same city by rival groups of exhibitors, "Desert Gold" is said to be repeating its record, as well as a similar record made by Benjamin B. Hampton's "The Westerners" in some of the larger cities of the country.

Contracts have been closed with William Cutts, Manager of the new Rialto Theatre, about to be opened in Salt Lake, and "Desert Gold" will be the first attraction at that theatre to be followed quickly with the presentation of "The Westerners."

The willingness with which exhibitors are said to pay prices for "Desert Gold" far in advance of any prices they have ever before paid is submitted as a proof of the drawing power of this production. The picture was nine months in the making in California, and according to reports it was finally held back for release at the most opportune exhibitor season of the year.

Among other contracts closed for "Desert Gold" within the last few days are: The Lyric, Blue Island, Ill.; the Bijou, Benton Harbor, Mich.; the Lakeside, Chicago, Ill.; the Madison Square, Chicago; the Michigan, Chicago; the Marion, Marion, Ohio; the Regent, Lima, Ohio; the Rex, California, Pa.; the Hippodrome, Taft, Cal.; the New Irving, Chicago, Ill.; the Grand, St. Petersburg, Fla.; the Empress, Magna, Utah; the Happy Hour, Murray, Utah; the Parkway, Chicago; the Shakespeare, Chicago; the Strand, Marrinette, Wis.; Lyceum, Augusta, Kans.; the Regent, Wichita, Kans

Five Exploitation Experts Go with Selznick

In line with the general expansion and broading of the scope of exploitation of Selznick pictures and all other productions distributed by Select Pictures Corporation, General Manager Sam E. Morris announces the appointment of five new exploitation experts.

The addition of these men makes of Select's staff an exploitation organization capable of carrying out to the highest degree co-operation with exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada.

Lindsay McKenna, formerly a New York newspaperman, has been appointed special exploitation representative for Select in Canada.

Paul Gray, formerly associated with Mark Gates as manager of the big Dayton, Theatre, Dayton, O., has joined the staff as exploitation representative in the New York exchange.

James Carrier, recently associated with Harry Kophar as managing director of the Pershing Theatre, St. Louis, has joined the exploitation division as promotion representative in the Cincinnati office.

C. W. Finney, formerly general advance publicity agent for several theatrical enterprises, assumes his new duties with Select as exploitation representative for the Dallas and New Orleans offices, director of exploitation Hunt Stromberg announces the promotion of Charles McClintock to the post of special exploitation representative in the home office headquarters, with supervision of Select exploitation men in the field.

Mary Minter's Next Realart Film to be Made in West

Mary Miles Minter's second Realart picture, which will follow "Anne of Green Gables," calls for so many outdoor spring and summer scenes that Miss Minter has decided to return to the West coast. Accordingly Miss Minter accompanied by her mother and other members of her family, boarded the Twentieth Century Limited Tuesday, October seventh, enroute for Los Angeles.

Immediately after Mary Miles Minter's arrival in the East and her affiliation with Realart Pictures Corporation, she began work on "Anne of Green Gables," and the company has been almost steadily occupied since then on the filming of this production, making the exteriors at Dedham, Mass., and the interiors in the New York studio.

Pathe's Broadway Sign Admirably Located

Pathe found an excellent location when it decided to place a hugh aerial electric sign on Broadway running the entire space between the Hotel Knickerbocker at 42d Street and the Hotel Calvert at 41st Street.

Black on a blue background is the color scheme used, and it proves to be extremely effective under the border of electric globes which fringe the sign on all four sides. The building it surmounts is not a high one, and the sign is read with perfect ease from the street level, a virtue which many of the Broadway billboards do not possess.

The sign features Dolores Cassinelli in the Albert Capellani production of "The Virtuous Model."

Catholic Photoplay Review Praises "Evangeline"

One of the most gratifying expressions of opinion received by Fox Film Corporation in regard to the great screen production of Longfellow's immortal poem "Evangeline" is embodied in the report of the Catholic Photoplay Pre-Review Service, an organization which is making itself felt as a valuable aid in the selection of suitable screen entertainment for the auditoriums of churches, schools, societies and clubs. In reporting his review of the all-star version of "Evangeline," Charles J. Meegan, editor of the Service, is said to have put himself on record as commending the picture in the highest terms possible.

H. Rifkin Seeks New Features for New England Theatres

Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Features Film Company of Boston has renewed contracts for the Territorial Sales Corporation during his trip to New York in search of new features for the New England and Boston theatres. The "Jester Comedies," to which Mr. Rifkin recently acquired territorial rights, are reported to have met with marked approval on the part of the patrons of the New England houses.

"Should a Husband Forgive," Fox production, is called a 1920 cinemelodrama.

Well Balanced Cast in Tourneur Feature

Maurice Tourneur is nearing the end of the filming of his latest success, "Treasure Island." It is predicted by those who are in a position to know that "Treasure Island" will be by far the greatest work that this artist of the film world has yet produced.

Among the screen players who will be seen in this production of "Treasure Island" are Shirley Mason, Lon Chaney, Charles Ogle, Charles Hill Mailes, Sydney Dean, Joseph Singleton, Henry Holden and Bull Montana.

A Publicity Campaign for "The Sky-Eye" Under Way

With the closing of all negotiations for the United States and Canadian rights to "The Sky-Eye," the aero special, the Sol Lesser organization is making special preparations for the exploitation of this feature. It is said that the exploitation possibilities are enormous, and that an extraordinary campaign is now under way which will involve trade and direct-to-the-public publicity. The paper and additional advertising is reported to be out of the ordinary, and several big tie-up campaigns of a national scope are under way, according to advices received.

Prints are now being made and it is figured that the picture will be ready for screening very shortly.

Capital Gets Screen Follies

The entire world rights for The Screen Follies, the latest animated novelty, is now being handled by The Capital Film Company of Chicago. An entire distributing and advertising campaign has been laid out and the New York office of The Screen Follies Inc., is working in close co-operation with The Capital Film Company of Chicago.

The new animated novelty idea, The Screen Follies has been scheduled to be released on December 1st by The Capital Film Company of Chicago. The Screen Follies new offices are situated in the Candler Building, New York.

Vitagraph Program for Year End

New Features Scheduled For Release; Comedy, O. Henry and Wolfville Subjects Also

THE last three months of the calendar year will see a number of notable productions from the Vitagraph studios. All of its stars will be represented in the releases during the next three months, and there will be a number of comedies by its four comedy companies as well as the famous O. Henry and "Wolfville" two-reel subjects.

One of the most important of the 1919 Vitagraph releases still to come is "The Vengeance of Durand," with Alice Joyce in the leading role. This superb photoplay adapted from Rex Beach's story by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, is in seven reels. It serves to inaugurate the series of twelve features by twelve of the foremost writers in America which Vitagraph will produce, releasing one each month. The cast includes such motion picture players as Percy Marmont, G. V. Seyffertitz, Herbert Pattee, William Bechtal, Eugene Strong and Mark Smith.

An important release will be "The Climbers" and also "The Fortune Hunter," both picture versions of unusually successful stage plays. "The Climbers" will come first and will be the forerunner of famous dramas to be put on the screen by Vitagraph.

"The Climbers" is of course based on the play of the same name by the late Clyde Fitch which was the greatest success of the theatrical season more than fifteen years ago. Vitagraph has produced it with great care, providing Corinne Griffith, who plays the lead, with a fine cast, including Percy Marmont, Hugh Huntley, Henry Hallam, Emily Fitzroy, George Spottswood, Charles Halton, Jane Jennings and Corinne Barker.

"The Fortune Hunter" will have Earle Williams in the title role, a character created by John Barrymore. Mr. Williams came East to the Brooklyn studio especially to appear in this feature. Mr. Williams will also be seen in "The Black Gate," a mystery play by Hilliard Booth, picturized by Lucien Hubbard. In this feature Ruth Clifford is his leading woman. Mr. Williams also completed at the Hollywood studio another picture called for the present, "The Far East." This, however, will not be released until the new year.

Pioneer Makes Debut on the West Coast

Special wires of congratulations were exchanged between the officials of the Pioneer Film Corporation in New York and the heads of the M. & R. Exchange in San Francisco, on the occasion of the initial showing of the latest Pioneer productions on the Coast. To the Rialto Theatre in San Francisco goes the honor of being the first house to show Henry B. Walthall in "The Long Arm of Mannister" and Florence Reed in "The Wives of Men."

Charles Rosenthal, Jr., the general manager of the M. & R., with offices in San Francisco and Los Angeles, wires that the entire Pioneer list is meeting with gratifying success in California, Arizona and Nevada.

The M. & R. Exchange is one of the charter members of the Pioneer Chain of Cooperative Offices and under the direction of Mr. Rosenthal it is rapidly becoming one of the biggest exchanges on the coast.

San Antonio Co. Purchases "Mr. Potter of Texas"

Announcement has been made that "Mr. Potter of Texas," the famous story from the pen of Archibald Clavering Gunter, has been purchased by the San Antonio Pictures Corporation as a screen vehicle for Maclyn Arbuckle. This story, which a few years ago was said to be one of the most popular books of the day, made a large fortune for its author and enjoyed a popularity on the other side of the Atlantic equal to its popularity here.

The character of Mr. Potter fits Mr. Arbuckle perfectly, and L. D. Wharton, director-general of the San Antonio Company, predicts that this new screen role will bring the Arbuckle name fame in the screen world equal to that it enjoyed on the stage through the noted star's creation of the parts of "The County Chairman" and the fat sheriff in "The Round Up."

Muriel Ostriche, motion picture star, whose last work before the camera was done in the World Film Corporation studio, will become a musical comedy star this month when she makes her debut in a new musical comedy entitled "Dream Girl," which will be sponsored by the Popular Productions, Inc.

Maurice Tourneur, producer, in an arrangement with Robertson-Cole.

Lawrence Weber to Make Series of Features for World

L. Lawrence Weber, who, after achieving distinction in the motion picture industry as a producer of superior features when his company "Popular Plays" was one of the original organizations associated with the Metro in its beginning, after a lapse of several years has again entered the motion picture field in association with Bobby North. They have contracted with World Film Corporation to make a series of features using only the best known of Broadway successes.

With the picturization of these plays it will be their policy to cast the very best talent obtainable in order to turn out motion picture productions of the highest rank. They have begun on their initial production, utilizing "The Blue Pearl," Anna Crawford Flexner's mystery play that was produced in New York and ran at the Longacre Theatre.

Extraordinary Booking Marks Release of World Picture

The contracts received by the World Film Corporation for showing of the C. R. Macauley Photoplays production of "When Bearcat Went Dry" have assumed such proportions on the first week of its bookings as to indicate that this is being received as one of the biggest feature pictures of the year. If the large number of contracts obtained as a result of the first week's work of world salesmen were from a particular locality it might appear that this picture lacked universal appeal. But such is not the experience with "When Bearcat Went Dry."

For the first time in the history of the Minneapolis district a simultaneous prerelease showing will be given of this feature in the leading theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, the three largest cities of this district. It has been booked over the entire circuit of F. F. Proctor's houses located in New York City, Albany, Mt. Vernon and Yonkers.

Apfel Working on Pretentious Production for World

One of the most pretentious productions made by World Pictures in over two years is now in course of operation at the studio of the company at Fort Lee. It is an Apfel feature with Montagu Love and June Elvidge starring in the principal roles. It has for its working title "The Steel King." Oscar Apfel since he has been making productions for the World Company scored a number of big successes and has in this script unlimited opportunities of scope. The subject matter of the story gives him a chance not alone for the employment of a large number of people, but the pictorial possibilities of putting the largest industry in the world on the screen in thrilling scenes are of a most flattering character.

"The Steel King" will be released on December 1st through the World Film Exchanges.

"Miracle Man" Remains Top-Notch Favorite

Enthusiastic messages of congratulation on "The Miracle Man" continue to pour into the Famous Players-Lasky offices from first-run houses in all sections of the country, indicating that the George Loane Tucker production is destined to get one of the biggest records in gross box-office receipts in the history of pictures.

Frank L. Newman, of Kansas City, one of the most prominent exhibitors in the Middle West, wrote Adolph Zukor as follows:

"Congratulations on the unquestioned masterpiece, 'The Miracle Man.' Have been irresistibly drawn to view it three times. Adjectives are inadequate to describe the tremendous appeal and undeniable human interest of this picture which is worthily a sensation of the nation. Public interest exceeds that in any other picture ever exhibited here. Find it impossible to accommodate the crowds."

Outlook for "Sunset-Burrud" Film Good

The October number of the Sunset magazine contains the first announcement of that periodical's connection with the "Sunset-Burrud Legends of the Wilderness" films. Besides stating that the scenics will be carefully "covered" from month to month by chronicles written by Leland J. Burrud, the chief of the "wilderness" expedition, the article, which is given a prominent display, further states that the Sunset Magazine will assist Mr. Burrud in finding locations, seeking out half-forgotten legends and otherwise assisting in making the films a success.

Accrding to Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, which will distribute the "legends," the films will be up to the Bulls-Eye high standard of photography.

Technical School For Studio Employees

Having come to the conclusion that systematic education of a studio force along technical as well as practical lines is essential to artistic production of motion pictures, J. N. Naulty, General Manager of the Eastern Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has established at the Fifty-Sixth Street studio a school of instruction in charge of Robert M. Haas and Charles Osborn Seessel, of the Art and Technical Department. The course of study, as originally suggested by Messrs. Haas and Seessel, will consist of the elements of architectural drawings, reading of plans, the dressing of sets, the selection and meaning of Period furniture, etc. The Class will be held one night each week and will be open to all employees of the Eastern studios.

"Topics of Day" Wins in Vaudeville

Every once in a while a novelty is introduced in vaudeville to entertain audiences. The latest novelty to be acclaimed a winner is the "Topics of the Day," the screen presentation of timely and humorous paragraphs, compiled from the Press of the World by the Literary Digest, produced by Timely Films, Inc., and distributed by Pathe.

Critics of the vaudeville stage praise the feature for its success as a source of humorous entertainment. "'Topics of the Day' continues to amuse and entertain the patrons," writes the critic of the Billboard. "When a new idea like this has caught on so strongly with patrons of a theatre like the Palace it shows that at last someone has solved the problem of what to put on after intermission."

Rex Beach's "Going Some" Will Follow "Silver Horde"

"Going Some" will be the next Rex Beach picture, following the completion this week at the Goldwyn studios of "The Silver Horde," directed by Frank Lloyd. The new production will be directed by Harry Beaumont, who has had charge of Tom Moore's Goldwyn pictures. "Going Some" is to be a rollicking comedy based on the theatre success Rex Beach wrote some years ago in collaboration with Paul Armstrong and then wrote the story as a novel.

"The Climbers" to be in Six Reels

"The Climbers," the stage success by the late Clyde Fitch, which Vitagraph has put into picture form with Corinne Griffith in the role created by Amelia Bingham, will be presented in six reels. In making the film version the adapters found such a wealth of material-splendid scenes that were only referred to in the original script, but which greatly enhanced the value of the story when worked out before the camera — that it was decided to release the picture in six reels instead of the customary five.

Logue in Porto Rico to Gather Local Color

That the B. A. Rolfe productions, presented through A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., will try to produce faithfully the atmosphere of every story picturized is evidenced by the announcement that Charles A. Logue, writer of all the firm's original scripts, has gone to Porto Rico to gather local color for use in the vehicle which Mr. Rolfe will put on after the completion of "The Red Virgin," now in process of production. Mr. Logue is now in Porto Rico and will remain there until he has completed his manuscript.

The vehicle Mr. Logue is engaged on is a Robert W. Chambers story, which is to be known as Number Two of the Robert W. Chambers series. The first production of this series is "The Amazing Lovers," which has not yet been released.

George Seigmann Joins Allan Dwan's Staff

George Seigmann, for years prominent in David W. Griffith circles as an actor and director, has severed his connections there and joined the directorial forces of Allan Dwan Productions. As Silas Lynch, the negro in "The Birth of a Nation" and important roles in "Intolerance" and "Hearts of the World," Mr. Seigmann won honors as an actor, giving up this work to enter the service of the government during the war.

Other members of the photographic staff who have recently joined the Allan Dwan forces to produce pictures for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation are Arthur Rosson and James Hogan, on production, and H. Lyman Broening, Glen McWilliams, Hal Rosson and L. W. McConnell, camera men.

"Mary's Ankle," the play which kept Broadway laughing hilariously for a whole season, and contributed much to the fame of May Tully, is now being filmed as a Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount-Artcraft, with Douglass MacLean and Doris May, in the limelight.

Ralph Kellard, former Pathé star of "The Shielding Shadow," "Pearl of the Army," "The Precious Packet," and the "Hillcrest Mystery," is playing the leading role in "A Scream in the Night," the new seven reel special shortly to be released by Select.

Select's Releases for October

Elaine Hammerstein Now Under Selznick Banner — Eugene O'Brien is Announced in a New Production

SELECT'S releases for October are composed entirely of Selznick productions. Three attractions are listed. Elaine Hammerstein makes her debut as a Selznick star in "The Country Cousin." Eugene O'Brien appears in his second Selznick Picture, "Sealed Hearts," and Olive Thomas in her third, "The Glorious Lady."

"The Country Cousin," in which Miss Hammerstein appears, is the comedy by Booth Tarkington and Julian Street which excited such unusual interest during its long run at the Gaiety Theatre in New York.

Walter McGrail is Miss Hammerstein's leading man in this production, and the other members of the cast are Lumsden Hare, Marguerite Siddon, Genevieve Tobin, Reginald Suffield, Bigelow Cooper, Helene Montrose and Guilbert Rooney. It was directed by Alan Crosland.

"Sealed Hearts" in which Eugene O'Brien makes his second appearance as a Selznick star is a Ralph Ince production. It is scheduled to be the second Select release for October. The original story was written by Edmund Goulding and the screen version was written by Eugene Walter, the noted dramatist.

"Sealed Hearts" is a story of love which involves a father and his adopted son in competition for the affections of the same woman. The father wins the lady's hand, but the son eventually claims her love. The ending of this unusual and intricate drama is said to be of a startling character.

Robert Edeson, Lucille Stewart, Frank Murdock, Helen Reinecke, Mr. Dean and Mrs. Kingsley are in the supporting cast.

The story of Olive Thomas' third Selznick Picture, which is the last on the list of Select's October releases, is as novel as it is thrilling. The scenes are laid in England, and the author, Edmund Goulding, himself an Englishman, has been faithful to the traditions and lore of his country. It was directed by George Irving.

Matt Moore, a brother of Owen Moore, another Selznick star, is Miss Thomas' leading man in "The Glorious Lady," and the other members of the cast are Evelyn Brent, Robert Taber, Huntley Gordon, Marie Burke, Mona Kingsley and Mrs. Henry Clide.

Ditmars Praises "Back to God's Country"

Raymond L. Ditmars, Curator of Manuals, New York Zoological Park, has placed a high endorsement on "Back To God's Country," James Oliver Curwood, starring Nell Shipman, and which will be released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"It is difficult to express the wholesome and invigorating atmosphere this picture created, and the feeling that this subject is so really big and broad of thought. I appreciate the necessary skill and ingenuity which it took to create an air of natural happiness and liberty among bears, mountain lions, wolves, foxes, porcupines and other dwellers of the great outdoor world," said Mr. Ditmars.

"House Without Children" Exploited Extensively

Lloyd W. Young, advertising expert for Argus Enterprises, producers of Robert McLaughlin's "The House Without Children" is in New York, consulting with other experts and planning a nation-wide advertising campaign to promote "The House Without Children."

When interviewed in the offices of The Film Market, Inc., Mr. Young said that "The House Without Children" is the first big production ever made by Argus and has proved an extraordinary success; that Argus purposes to make a series of big pictures expressly for the Open Market; and that the company is planning a schedule to place future McLaughlin-Argus productions with independent distributors throughout the entire world.

"Isle of Conquest" Listed as a Norma Talmadge Special

Select Pictures Corporation announces as a forthcoming Select Special, Norma Talmadge in "The Isle of Conquest," a picture adapted for the screen by John Emerson and Anita Loos from Arthur Hornblow's widely-read novel, "By Right of Conquest." Miss Talmadge's latest starring attraction was directed by Edward Jose, and, in presenting the star's newest offering, Joseph M. Schenck has carried out his policy of surrounding Miss Talmadge with players of known popularity and ability. Wyndham Standing is the leading man, and has the sort of a role that should win him many more friends. An interesting feature of the supporting company is the fact that Natalie Talmadge, Norma's sister, appears as a sister to the star in the latter's screen character. Other favorites in the group are Charles Gerard, Gareth Hughes, Claire Whitney, Elder Hopper and Joe Smiley.

Lithograph Firm Opens Office

The Ritchey Lithographing Corporation has opened an uptown office at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York. Oscar J. Lynch is in charge.

Marion Davies at Work Soon

Marion Davies will soon begin work in the Biograph Studio, on a very special production, the name of which has not yet been announced.

Myron Selznik announces that he has purchased the screen rights to "Chivalrous Charlie" the popular novel by May Tully.

Pathe Soared High in September

The New York Branch of the Pathe Exchange Service Reports September as a Record Month

A FAIR indication of the business that is in store for the New York branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., during the season now getting under full power, is conveyed in a statement to the effect that September was the biggest month in its history.

Feature bookings, it is said, moved with a celerity that carried the organization well beyond its quotas on a number of the big features. "The Virtuous Model" according to reports was carried to a high figure through the activities of the month, and is now within a fraction of the minimum amount set for it by the Pathe Home Office. "The Thirteenth Chair" has long since passed its quota so it is reported; but there is not any let up in the bookings. The claim is made that at the end of September the production was several thousands of dollars beyond its quota and still going strong. "The World Aflame" also is going well, while "Oh Boy" continues booking heavily.

The first Blackton feature "The Moonshine Trail" is making good progress, though its release date is October 19th. "The Gay Old Dog," "A Woman of Pleasure," and "The Right to Lie," all Pathe Specials, are said to be in big demand among New York exhibitors. "Impossible Catherine" broke its best record during the last week in September.

According to advices the demand for the new Rolin comedy series, featuring "Snub" Pollard, has been so insistent, that the New York branch has no hesitation in predicting they will step right into the position vacated by the one-reel Lloyd subjects. The new Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, are booking heavily and, so far as New York is concerned, can be hailed now as a great success.

Serial business is reported to be booming, too. "Bound and Gagged," the George Seitz offering, and "The Black Secret," Pearl White's last serial, are setting high-speed paces it is claimed, in the Metropolitan district.

Bull's Eye to Release "Round-Up" Soon

The exclusive motion pictures of the Pendleton (Ore.) "Round-Up," rights to which have been granted to the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, will be released about November 1 on the state rights market. Leland J. Burrud, chief of the "Sunset-Burrud Legends of the Wilderness" expedition, was in sole charge of picturizing the "Round-Up." Burrud's assistants were George Larson and Harry Jackson, both Bulls-Eye cameramen. The offering will be art-titled throughout, according to Mr. Cohen.

One of the exploitation features now being worked out by the Bulls-Eye sales department will be the balloting of the theatre patrons, who, by their votes, will decide on the $500 gold coin prize to be awarded the cowboy or Indian doing the most hazardous "stunt" before the camera.

"The Miracle of Love" to Be Issued Next Month

"The Miracle of Love" the Cosmopolitan production from the famous novel by Cosmo Hamilton has been completed at the Biograph studio, New York City, and will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft picture, by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation next month. Advance announcements from Famous Players-Lasky speak highly of the picture, which was directed by Robert Z. Leonard, with Leon d'Usseau as his assistant.

The cast, which is almost entirely an English one, is headed by Lucy Cotton, whose work in "Sun Up," and other pictures has placed her in the high ranks of screen artists. Wyddhan Standing, one of the screen's foremost leading men, plays opposite Miss Cotton in "The Miracle of Love."

The supporting cast includes Ivo Dawson, whose first American picture is "The Miracle of Love," and who has had a splendid screen and stage record abroad; Ida Darling, veteran of the screen, and one of the best known of its grandes dames; Lila Blow, who is excellently cast as an Englishwoman; Percy Standing and Jackie Saunders.

"Copperhead" Entailed Care in Making

One of the most gigantic tasks which ever confronted a motion picture studio staff and director is that presented by "The Copperhead," Famous Players-Lasky's spectacular picturization of Lionel Barrymore's sensational stage success Mr. Barrymore plays the same role, that of Milt Shanks, as he did in the play. This task involves constructing and twice reconstructing an entire village, the employing, marshalling, costuming and directing of literally thousands of extras and an almost endless amount of research and study of archives pertaining to the periods of the Mexican and Civil Wars. Charles Maigne is the director in charge and the Art and Technical Department of the 56th Street Studio, under the supervision of J. N. Naulty, general manager of the Eastern studios, is doing the constructing work.

Wallace Reid and Houdini in Coming Paramount Issues

Wallace Reid in "The Lottery Man" and Houdini in "The Grim Game" divide the honors of the Paramount-Artcraft release schedule for October 12. The one being a rollicking light comedy and the other a melodramatic mystery play. These pictures are as widely different in theme and action as any two could be.

Elmer Harris, who picturized "Sapho" for Paramount with Pauline Frederick as star, adapted "The Lottery Man" from the play by Rida Johnson Young.

"The Grim Game," is pre-release showing in many of the big cities, has already traveled far on the road to success. Houdini is supported by Ann Forrest, Tully Marshall, Thomas Jefferson, Arthur Hoyt, Augustus Phillips, Mae Busch and Ed. Martin.

Character of Story: Social and Sex Problems.

Theme: Love

Characters: Jean Norris, social worker; Patricia Frabsworth, her friend; Martha Norris, her mother and a religious fanatic; Franklin Herrick, Jean's husband; "The Kitten," Herrick's affinity; Gregory Allen, Jean's affinity; Margaret Allen, his wife; Jerome Stuart, middle-aged social worker.

The Plot: Jean Norris, upon her graduation from the University of California is very anxious to find some work which will take her out of the atmosphere of her home, which is unduly religious. Though not pious she is a prig. She secures a job as a "sorter" in a public library in San Francisco, where she makes the acquaintance of Franklin Herrick, a newspaper man who introduces her to a Bohemian circle, including "The Kitten." The Kitten is married to another man but openly prefers Herrick. Jean overlooks or fails to see this relationship and marries Herrick. He gets her a position on a newspaper but she leaves to become associated with a Dr. Harry MacLean, a social worker. Jean despises the Bohemian set and Herrick finds her entirely devoid of wifely affection. Discouraged in his attempts to rouse a response to his own affection, he falls back on The Kitten who welcomes him back. He and Jean have little to do with one another. One night he breaks an engagement with The Kitten to dine with Jean and the other woman arrives on the scene and makes the facts known. Jean leaves him and comes East to New York where she becomes a charity worker, suffrage leader and general club woman. Dr. Harry follows her. They interest Gregory Allen, a young architect, in building a home for consumptives. Allen is a man of family, devoted to his little daughter but rather bored with his wife, who takes little or no interest in him or in the child. Propinquity results in a love affair between Jean and Gregory. She encourages him to enter a contest in a big job in Chicago and with her encouragement he wins it. This makes it necessary for him to move to Chicago but he frequently returns to New York. Margaret his wife, suddenly develops a social talent of great use in his profession. She begins to take an interest in his work and gives dinners which win them a host of friends and get her husband many clients. His views gradually undergo a great change and when Jean finally writes him that she thinks they should be honest in their relationship and openly love together in spite of his marriage, he replies that he lacks the courage to take this step. Jean goes back to her social work and skits the edge of one other affair but does not find it in her heart to love another man Jerome Stuart, a middle aged social worker, is very congenial and Jean finds his presence a comfort. He falls in love with her and asks her to marry him. She does so, though she acknowledges to him that she does not feel anything stronger than affection and a deep friendship for him.

"New Men for Old"
By Howard Vincent O'Brien

Character of Story: Industrial; Love Interest.

Theme: Old and New Business Methods.

Characters: Harlan Chandos, idler who inherits nothing; Dorothy Gresham, society girl; Francis Gresham, packer king, her father; Billy Harrower, young business man, in love with Dorothy; Keppy, head of the Keppy Company, advertising agents; Brega, an artist; Devereaux & Deakin, attorneys; Traxler, a plodder.

The Plot: Harlan Chandos, idler and rich man's son, who has been reared in idleness and played at art in Paris, is called home to his native city of Chicago upon the death of his father, reputed millionaire. He finds that instead of a rich inheritance, he has been left without a cent in the world. He is astonished and disgusted at this turn of affairs but as a matter of necessity takes a position as a commercial artist with the Keppy Company — a job which pays little and under a man whose sense of business ethics is a constant offense. During this time he makes the acquaintance of Traxler, a clerk, who introduces him to "office help" society. He has, meanwhile, kept up his acquaintance with Dorothy Gresham, but owing to his meagre income dares not pay her serious attention. He is, however, regarded as a rival by Billy Harrower, a hustling type, who despises Chandos as an inefficient money-getter. Owing to the absence of a copy writer, Chandos is delegated to write a booklet for the Gresham Food Products Company and turns out a piece of literature on the Champagne country with delicate sketches. Gresham sends for him. Keppy, fearing that the copy has not been acceptable, is furious. Gresham compliments Chandos on his work, and asks him who drew the illustrations. Chandos admits they are his work. Keppy, finding Gresham pleased, desires to hold him up for the largest possible sum and bills him for "special art work" for the booklet. Gresham, knowing that the drawings were made in the office, cancels his contract with Keppy. Following a furious scene, Keppy discharges Chandos. Dorothy explains the situation to her father, who makes Chandos advertising manager of his firm. Chandos finds the business interesting and soon works up to the position of sales manager as well as advertising manager. He is constantly urging Gresham to do something to alleviate the condition of the workers. Chandos believes that it pays to treat the workers well and to make their lives worth living. He also believes that a good product is its own best advertisement. Gresham resents this. He holds to the old creed that the best business policy is to give as little as possible for the money and charge what the traffic will bear. Reforms which do not either cut costs or increase profits seem to him a sort of sentimentality that will ruin business. Gresham is called to Europe and with some misgivings leaves Chandos in charge as general manager. Labor trouble arises. Chandos is for granting such reforms as seem just and fair. Billy Harrower opposes him in this and when Chandos proceeds to carry out his own program, Harrower sends hurriedly for Gresham to come home. Gresham returns and discharges Chandos. Chandos declares his love for Dorothy but feels that it is hopeless, because he is again without a position. Fire breaks out in the factory and destroys many of the buildings. Gresham calls on Chandos to take charge. Gresham, to his own surprise, finds that he is concerned with what will become of the workers thrown out of work by the fire. He sends for Chandos and tells him that he has come to the conclusion that it is useless to fight the ideals of the coming generation; "the old order changeth" and to discharge one man will not stem the tide; Chandos is again made general manager and Gresham consents to his marriage with Dorothy.

Locale: Chicago.

Picture High Lights: Chandos encounter with Keppy, the fire, the scene where the old man admits his defeat at the hands of the younger man.

everything that money can buy, is young, beautiful and charming. She has a coming-out party, is bridesmaid at a fashionable wedding and has endless proposals of marriage. Only one man makes any impression — Clark Cummings, who is usher at the same wedding, but Sheila decides that she could not give up the luxury to which she is accustomed even for Clark. Then her father dies, leaving the family penniless. Her mother goes to live with relatives, and Sheila seeks a living in New York, preferring to avoid her former friends. She has numerous adventures, but eventually, after a hard struggle, makes good and brings her mother to live with her. Her employer also falls in love with her, but Sheila has never been able to forget Clark, and when a long delayed letter tells her that he is still longing for her, she knows that he is the man. After the novelty wears off, life on the ranch seems unbearable to her, and she returns to her old job in the city, but eventually she realizes that Clark is essential to her happiness, and becomes reconciled to the country.

Locale: Chicago and New York, mostly interiors.

Picture High Lights: An intensely interesting character in Sheila, a theme with a strong appeal to girls and women, and plenty of material for five reels.

"A Woman Who Dared"
By Dale Drummond

Character of Story: Drama of Married Life.

Theme: Conventions.

Characters: Kathie Boroughs, the woman who dared; Haskell Boroughs, a tyrant, her husband; Eric Lucknow, the apex of the triangle; George Lattimore, who aspires to be an apex; Madeline Arnott, husband-snatcher; Nell Lamar, a fortunate wife; George Lamar, her husband; Clara Nullen, stenographer; Jack Mullen, her son.

The Plot: The story revolves around the question: Would a conventional woman dare to right herself and secure her own happiness if married to the wrong man? Kathie Boroughs is married to a wealthy and tyrannical husband who is insanely jealous of her but not true to her. He uses her in business and dresses her only for display. Eric Lucknow knows that she is unhappy and is himself in love with her but does not press his devotion upon her. George Lattimore openly makes love to her but her husband pretends not to believe it because Lattimore can help him in business. Kathie finds her husband not only suspicious but stingy. He buys her beautiful clothing and lends her jewelry, taking it away from her after each occasion when she wears it. She becomes fascinated with Lucknow but conceals her interest. She discovers that Madeline Arnott is wearing her jewelry and that gossip connects her name with that of Haskell Boroughs. Boroughs practically admits his interest in this woman but believes that his wife will not dare to seek a divorce. She picks up a stenographer in the park and learns that the girl is about to become the mother of an illegitimate child. She desires to help this girl, Clara Mullen, and appeals to Haskell for help. To her surprise he gives her money for this purpose. Domestic matters go from bad to worse. Clara Mullen dies, leaving a little boy, Jack, with the request that Kathie Boroughs adopt him and asking that a certain note be unread if Boroughs consents but read if he refuses. He consents on condition that the note be given him unread. Kathie finally announces her intention of opening a millinery store. Boroughs declares that if she does so she shall leave his home for good. She sticks to her intention and goes into business, going to a boarding house to live. Boroughs is seriously injured in an automobile accident and sends for her. He tells her that Jack is his son. She says she has already discovered this, having found Clara's note in his pocket but she has forgiven him. Haskell dies and a year later Kathie is married to Eric who says of her that she has dared to play the greater part — to carry out her contract in the face of every sort of discouragement and cruelty.

Locale: New York.

Picture High Lights: Kathie's rescue of Clara Mullen, Haskell's accident, scene where Haskell acknowledges his son.

"The Yazoo Mystery"
By Irving Craddock

Character of Story: Adventure.

Theme: Discovering the man who has been robbing freight cars of meat products.

Characters: Hiram Strong, Sr., and Jr., former, a millionaire; the latter, spoiled and worthless; Ben Taylor, detective; Anna Bell Morgan, the girl; Becker, owner of fertilizing plant; Burrell, a chief clerk.

The Plot: Hiram Strong, Jr., is disowned by his father, after the latter's patience is too long tried by his son's misdemeanors. Hiram gets a job as stoker on a ship bound for a Mexican port. He meets Ben Taylor, and when the ship hits a mine, the two escape together. In New Orleans, Hiram determines to learn telegraphy and obtains a position with the railroad. Then it is discovered that quantities of meat are missing from freight cars, and as the cars are sealed by the Bureau of Animal Industry and opened only upon being delivered to the freight agent, suspicion falls on Hiram. The rest of the story is devoted to unravelling the mystery, and it develops that Becker has obtained seals and has been stealing the meat for his own plant and sealing up the cars again. Hiram learns that lumber can be brought down the river and sold at enormous profits, and so makes good financially, whereupon Ben admits that he was appointed by his father to follow him and report the son's actions, and that his father is quite ready to receive him now that he has proved his own worth. So he marries Anna Bell, who has meanwhile assumed another name and a difficult role in order to help convict Becker and save Hiram, and all is well.

Locale: Ship at sea, New Orleans and Quarrytown, La.

Picture High Lights: Shipwreck, dynamiting a railroad station, boat scenes on the Mississippi river.

"Saul"
By Corrinne Lowe

Character of Story: An East Side epic; love interest.

Theme: Ambition and ideals.

Characters: Saul Furinski, a son of the machine; Channah Sadowsky, his wife; Gabriel Sadowsky, her father; Leo Rosenbaum, Saul's partner; Faith Severance, the other woman; Bertha Heimerdinger, the lure of wealth; Hendricks, Gersten, Lippman, Wang and others in cloak and suit trade.

The Plot: Saul is born in an East Side tenement with the hum of the machine in his ears. With the death of his father he gets a job with a contractor and determines to become the master of the machine. He sees Channah Sadowsky in the Easter parade and falls in love with her, approaching her father, an idealist and Zionist, through the marriage broker. Saul as assistant designer for a manufacturer makes a suggestion that saves 5,000 suits from being a dead loss. Rosenbaum, salesman, invites Saul to join him in the manufacturing business. For this Saul needs money and as Channah has a dowry of only $300 is tempted to marry Bertha Heimerdinger, who has $3,000. Bertha and her family, however, so grate on his sensibilities that at the last moment he flees to Channah and marries her in haste. By selling his stick pin and other articles he gets together enough to enter business with Rosenbaum, Channah acting as their model. He designs "Sunrise" a very effective evening gown which is a great success. Channah is hurt that Saul stoops to the little tricks and cheating ways of the cloak and suit trade. Saul fears that his idealism and his love of beauty may hold him back from success. Jealousy of buyers wrecks the manufacturing business and Rosenbaum and Saul become contractors. They are very successful. They hit upon a khaki camp dress for girls which is a great success. Wang, and advertising agent gets Saul to label the dress the "Polly Pepper" and begin manufacturing it, selling it by mail order. The dress is a success and a musical comedy takes it up. Saul and Channah have been drifting apart. With success he seems no longer to need her. He goes to Europe and in the crossing makes the acquaintance of Faith Severance, a buyer and designer who fascinates him with her broad outlook and assured air. She returns his interest in a measure, but does not surrender her independence. She proposes to Saul that they form a syndicate and chain of stores linking together the various fashions in boots, gowns, hats, etc., which has never been done. Saul stakes all on this venture and his secret is made known by a business rival just as his wife, who has learned of Faith, intended to tell it out of revenge. Saul is boycotted by the buyers. In his defeat he finds that Channah is the comforter and that Faith goes only with success. Channah returns to him. By a lucky stroke, some suede cloth which they had overbought on when manufacturing becomes valuable and they have enough money to begin again understanding, as they did not understand before, that it is the path — not the goal — which makes happiness; that the struggle for success gives more joy than success itself.

Locale: N. Y. and steamship.

Picture High Lights: Scene where Saul leaves Bertha for Channah; the first failure; the second failure; the reunion.

Theme: Spies and Sex.

Characters: Dulcie Soane, model; Garry Barres, American artist; Nihla Quellen, a dancer; Ferez Bey, Eurasian adventurer; Adolph Gerhardt, German-American millionaire; Count de'Eblis, French traitor; Esme Trenor, an artist and pacifist; Max Freund, German spy; Soane, janitor; Murtagh Skeel, Sinn Fein, leader; Jim Westmore, a friend of Barres.

The Plot: This is a typical Chambers story of the war period, opening with a scene on the Bosphorus, jumping to Paris three years later and thence migrating to New York. Count d'Eblis, owner of a Paris newspaper and visiting in the Orient, falls in love with Nihla Quellen, a dancer, and to get an introduction agrees with Ferez Bey, German agent, that his newspaper shall be pro-German for a certain monetary consideration. The necessary money is supplied by Gerhardt, the German-American, in return for the Order of the Red Eagle. d'Eblis launches Nihla as a dancer in Paris but gets no satisfaction from her beyond her promise that she will consider him as a matrimonial possibility. He contrives, however, to involve her in the purchase of the newspaper, passing the cheques through her hands so that it appears that she was as deep in treason as he. Painting on a lawn by moonlight before the villa of the Count, Garry Barres, an American artist, is discovered by Nihla who has stolen away from a party. They dance together on the lawn, and finally go to the city in a canoe by way of a lark. The Count charges Nihla with having betrayed him to the authorities and lets her know that she is deeply implicated in the plot. She flees over night to America and there she again encounters Garry. Dulcie Soane, supposed daughter of the janitor in Garry's apartment house, has become a model for Garry. She is devoted to him, but for a long time he regards her as a child and believes himself in love with Nihla who, for fear of the French secret service, goes under her real name of Thessalie Dunois. She is pursued by German agents who seek to get her out of the way, and she takes refuge with Garry Barres and his friend Jim Westmore, who falls in love with her. They all go up the country to Garry's home. There they meet Skeel, Irish agitator whose henchmen have won over Soane to the scheme of an invasion of Canada. Skeel is really the father of Nihla or Thessalie as she now calls herself but she never more than half suspects this, though Skeel himself knows it. An ill-fated attempt is made by the Irish to invade Canada. Just before the expedition starts Ferez Bey makes an attempt to murder Thessalie but she is rescued by Jim Westmore, who declares his love for her and which she returns. The expedition ends in the destruction of the power boat on which Soane, Skeel and the rest of the conspirators in the story are starting for Canada. Their boat enters into a shooting contest with a Canadian cruiser which results disastrously to the Sinn Feiners. All are killed. Garry discovers that he really loves the little model — not the dancer — and all ends happily with all of the men on the point of enlisting in the army, for this is just at the point that the United States enters the European war.

Locale: Necessary scenes in New York. Constantinople scenes easily taken anywere, as it is interior. French scene the same, though a big lawn scene. No especially big situations beyond the destruction of the boat.

"The City of Encounters"
By Horace Hazeltine

Character of Story: Mystery and Romance.

Theme: An Unclaimed Fortune.

Characters: John Brooke, fresh from Honolulu; Annette Colby, a daughter of the candy king; Constance Colby, her sister; John Moore of Chicago; Eugene Moore, newspaper reporter; Mumford, a riding master; Mrs. Mumford, his wife; Rosenstein, a crook; Shorty Hanks, a thief; Stoughton, a swindler; Kennedy, a dupe; Colby, the candy king; Foley, a fixer.

The Plot: John Brooke, on his way from Honolulu to visit an uncle in Boston, is caught in a railroad wreck and rescues from the wreck Constance Colby, who makes a deep impression upon him. He does not know her name. He arrives in New York and finds that instead of his own bag he has an unmarked bag containing more than one hundred thousand dollars in greenbacks. To explain the possession of this money to a curious porter, he states that this money represents the stakes in a bet as to the color of the eyes of the daughter of the candy king. It happens that Annette Colby, daughter of the head of the candy trust is on the floor below. Brooke reads in the newspaper that John Brooke has been killed in the wreck and his body identified. Pending the arrival of a claimant for the money, he puts the bag in the New Netherlands Bank taking a warehouse receipt for it. He is accosted by Shorty Hanks, a thief, as he leaves the bank. Hanks evidently knows about the bag and takes Brooke to be a thief also. Brooke moves to another hotel, where he puts his name down as John Moore of Chicago. He receives a note from a Mrs. Mumford, uptown, inviting him to dinner and claiming mutual friends in Chicago. He turns this letter in at the desk, knowing it cannot be meant for him. Driving through Central Park, he hears a woman scream and finds Annette Colby lying on the bridle path. She explains that she has run away to New York and married a riding master named Mumford who demanded money immediately after the marriage and being refused tore a pearl necklace from her and knocked her from her horse. Brooke undertakes to recover the necklace and goes to Mumford's in response to the note. He finds Mrs. Mumford alone. She gives him knockout drops and he awakes some hours later to find Mumford dead drunk and no one else there. The pearls are in Mumford's shoe. Brooke takes them. The telephone rings and the real John Moore is on the telephone, in response to the same note Brooke received. They get together and compare notes Moore meets Annette Colby and it develops they have been carrying on an anonymous correspondence. Mumford plans to kidnap Annette. Brooke and Moore learn of this and rent him a yacht belonging to Paddock, a friend of Moore's who is now a balloonist for pleasure only. Mumford's agents get Constance Colby by mistake and carry her on board the boat as a helpless invalid. Moore falls afoul of Mumford and thrashes him. He then throws Mumford and Rosenstein, his pal, into irons and locks them in a forward cabin. The boat is struck by a steamer and sunk. Mumford and Rosenstein are drowned. Brooke receives a message asking him to send the bag to Moore at an uptown address. There he meets Stoughton, who claims to own the money which he says was stolen by a man named Kennedy. Moore has packed the bag with paper instead of money. It develops that the money really was gained by a swindle on several banks, among others one owned by Colby and Brooke's uncle. In Philadelphia Colby seeks Kennedy, who is supposed to have the money and with him goes Foley, one of the crooks Kennedy shoots and kills Foley. Colby and the others escape in Paddock's balloon.

Marc MacDermott is working on his second production for the A. H. Fischer Productions, and his two parts afford opportunity for absolute contrasts in playing, he says. In "The Amazing Lovers'" he was an old hermit, living a lonely life of solitude in the hills, while in "The Red Virgin" he is a busy man of the world, very much interested in people and life.

Gordon Standing, who has lately arrived upon the scene in the film world, is a cousin of Wyndham's, and a nephew of Sir Herbert's. While in the English Service, he used all his spare time in promoting shows for the Tommies, wherever it was possible. He began on the Champagne Front, and later spent four months at Trier, where one entertainment or another was always in course of production. He is now engaged by the Fischer Prods. for a part in "The Red Virgin."

Director Charles Brabin, who underwent a severe operation at St. Luke's Hospital, is well on the road to recovery. It is expected that he will return to his home this week, and will soon be ready to commence work on his next Fox production.

Edmund Goulding has finished "The Daughter of Two Worlds" for Norma Talmadge, also "The Magdalene of Mudville" for Olive Thomas and "The Imp' for Elsie Janis, all these representing one month's labor, we understand. Now Mr. Goulding is considering directing the production of his own stories. As he had experience on the English stage as a director, before coming to this country, he should have no difficulty whatever. He has kept in close touch with the director's methods, while working at the Selznick studios, and is thoroughly well acquainted with their technique.

Studio Notes

Sylvia Breamer walked away from Russeck's Fifth Ave shop not long ago with five thousand dollars worth of wearing apparel, which she wanted to use in the present Blackton production, the working title of which is "Respectable by Proxy." There was an ermine evening cloak, valued at three thousand alone, and several gowns, any one of which, was sure to make the hearts of all who saw it on the screen, envious for weeks. And Miss Breamer took all these things, without signing a check or having them charged or murmuring a word about C. O. D., and no detective was put on her trail either. How was it? Well, you see, Mr. Russeck apparently enjoys the J. Stuart Blackton productions, and also likes to see the photographic value of his own creations, so he told Miss Breamer that she might have anything in his shop that she wanted to use, to be returned after the scenes had been made. We ask you, wouldn't you like to shop in that fashion?

Charles Eyton, general manager of the Lasky studio and his wife who as Kathline Williams, have completed arrangements to build one of the most attractive residences in the exclusive Hollywood district. Their new home will be situated on the Vine Street hill, and will overlook not only the grounds of the Lasky studio, but most of Hollywood.

Jeanie McPherson, C. B. De Mille's scenario writer, is recuperating at the Good Samaritan Hospital. Los Angeles, from a recent illness.

Upon Bryant Washburn's recent return to Los Angeles from Chicago where he filmed some of his scenes of "It Pays to Advertise," he found a future competitor for stellar honors at his home. The youngster, who has been named Dwight Ludlow Washburn, weighs 11 pounds and according to Mrs. Washburn, bears a striking resemblance to his daddy, Bryant.

Al Wilke, C. B. De Mille's personal publicity man, has returned to the Lasky studio at Hollywood after an absence of four weeks in New York City where he assisted in the exploitation of Mr. De Mille's special subject, "Male and Female."

"Public Desires Serials"—Wm. Duncan

WILLIAM DUNCAN, Vitagraph's Director-Star, whose dramatic artistry and directorial ingenuity are responsible for the high quality of "Smashing Barriers," his new serial, replies to the critics who, in spite of the great public approval of continued photoplays, continue to question their appeal to high-class audiences.

"It has been said that serials do not ring true because it is beyond credulity that the hero and heroine could live through the situations recorded in the average fifteen episodes," said Mr. Duncan, "and this statement shows an entire absence of consideration of the facts."

"When each episode of a serial is properly acted and directed, it becomes a separate story in itself and bears no relation to the next episode except in that the same characters are again on the stage, and the action is taken up in sequence. Viewed in this light it is well within the bounds of reason that human beings could encounter the adventures shown in any one episode and successfully avoid the dangers to which they are seen subject.

"It is true that in real life it would be hardly probable that any one would or could endure the succession of adventures that befall the principal characters during the action of the entire serial, but taken separately the incidents are logical and the escapes are humanly possible. Consequently the serial as it is produced to-day is as sane in its technique, theme and action as the five-reel drama.

"In the serials I have produced for the Vitagraph Company I have given the public a full measure of the action, thrill and suspense that it demands in photodramas. In each serial I have endeavored to give fifteen separate dramas each drained of useless dressing and padding. They have been the essence of melodrama and that I think is what the public wants."

Speaking of the demands of the public as felt through the pulse of attendance at the theatres running serials, Mr. Duncan said:

"Many of the larger theatres do not run serials on the mistaken theory that their audiences are 'too high-class' for the reception of continued plays. Nothing that I have ever encountered in all of my experience as a road show manager and theatrical producer, nor as a motion picture player and director, bears out their contention. People do not enter the handsome big theatres to enjoy the ornate decorations any more than the audiences assemble in the smaller houses to admire the simplicity of the house. They come to the big and the small theatres and pay their admissions for what is presented on the screen and the screen has gained and is holding its popularity through the fact that it exemplified the maximum of dramatic action.

"Something like 85 per cent. of the patronage of motion pictures is had in the small theatres and most small theatres run serials. The proprietors and managers of these small theatres are closer to their patrons than are the managers of the larger houses; most of them know each patron personally and the fact that they continue to run serials is proof positive that the public is in favor of this class of picture play.

"The audience in the larger theatre is no different than that in the smaller theatre if taken collectively and compared. There are differences of taste in different nationalities, but in any one nation one crowd differs from another only in its size and as the bulk of American audience have declared in favor of the serial it will be found that they will draw equally as well in the million dollar theatre as they do in the average residential house."

Ambition Stirs Petite May McAvoy : : :

I CAN hardly wait to begin my new part," little May McAvoy declared in our office the other day. "I dream about it at night, and I picture each scene during the day. I think I know just how I am going to play every bit of it."

The new part is that of a little Chinese girl, in a forthcoming Charles Miller production call "East Is East," and Miss McAvoy went on to tell us about her elaborate make-up. It seems they made twelve careful photographic tests before Mr. Miller was fully satisfied with her resemblance to the high cheeked, slant-eyed maidens of the Far East. She pulls the upper part of her cheeks back as far as possible and then holds them so with heavy pieces of courtplaster — an uncomfortable process but a satisfactory one in its result. The courtplaster is hidden under her wig, and such difficulties as were caused in the procuring of that wig!

The cameraman decided that it had to be red — black looked too black under the lens' scrutiny — but the wig-maker could not be induced to comprehend the amazing fact that any one should be willing to pay for a red Chinese wig. They certainly knew very little, those people. Why, the most ignorant of fans would be certain in their knowledge that the hair of the nearest laundryman's wife was black, unalterably and irrevocably black. But the camera photographed red as a nice, gloss dark gray much more suitable to Miss McAvoy's features than a dull, lifeless inky color. Well — if they were quite determined — but the wigmaker was still unconvinced.

The make-up will afford the new leading lady her first opportunity to do character work, one reason why she is so enthusiastic about it.

"I want to play real parts," she said seriously, "if I thought I should have to be an ingenue all my life and that I would never get any farther up than I am to-day, I should stop right now. I like the fame that is the reward for good work, and I mean to do everything in my power to deserve it. I'm in pictures with my sleeves rolled up, as it were."

If success continues at the rate at which it has already come to her the dainty little dark-haired, blue-eyed player will not be long in having her dreams realized. Less than two years ago she walked into the Fox casting department and asked for a chance to show what she could do. Fox had nothing suitable at that moment, but suggested that she try the Metro office. Two days later Metro assigned her a small rôle in a one-reel publicity picture they were making for a certain brand of sugar. No sooner was that finished than she was offered the ingenue lead in a production about to be made in Philadelphia, and after that came various bits.

"I think it's a mistake," she asserted, "to refuse any sort of part, because you feel that it's not big enough for you. Experience is essential, and I've always accepted everything that was offered me. I'm sure it's good policy."

Perhaps this is the reason for her quick rise to prominence, this and her determination to make good. For, in spite of her diminutive size and merry smile, there is a firm set to Miss McAvoy's chin that betokens the fact that she is going to get what she wants.

"I like pictures, too," she added, "and I don't mind admitting it. I have my favorites among the stars, and I love to watch them in the 'movies.' I love the theatre, but I don't care a thing in the world about books. There's no use pretending that I like to read, because it bores me to death. No, I'm not particularly athletic, either. I'm crazy about skating and swimming, but things like tennis and hockey don't appeal to me at all.

"I'm getting some stunning costumes for the part. I wish you'd come down to the studio and see them," were her parting words, as she hastened away to another appointment.— Marguerite Jones.

Open Challenge to All Hard Riding Filmers

Challenging other motion picture players in various contests has become the most popular of sports in the west coast film world, and now comes Hoot Gibson, Universal western star, with the following defi to all hard-riding gentlemen in or out of the films. His open letter is here reprinted:

"Dear Mr. and Mrs. Public: This here is to notify any and everybody who has a notion that they can ride, bulldog or rope that I hereby accept any and all challenges recently issued.

"Also I am here to challenge not only any hard-ridin' picture cowpunch in the business, but any other leatherpullin' or clean-ridin' galoot in the whole wide world in any kind of a stunt they can think of, from bustin' wild ones to rowin' a boat.

"I challenge any sombrero-wearin' hombre on earth to a dull-dogging contest, or cronc riding, or steer roping and tying, or fancy riding, or racing on or in any kind of a vehicle from a hammock to a giraffe.

"Or I will swim, run a foot-race or spit at a crack with any horse-forking pilgrim on the range. Or I will drive an auto in any kind of a race.

"And if anybody who wants to get in on this can think of any other kind of a contest, why, I'll tackle that.

Here and There

Roger Lytton is reported to have done such excellent work in the Buffalo Motion Picture Corp. production "The Sport of Kings" that Director Thomson, after telling him that his part was finished, hastily telephoned him one morning, asking if he could spare a little more time, as he wanted to enlarge his part and in order to give the audience a chance to see more of his work.

Lillian Hall has left for Los Angeles to play an important part in a forthcoming Rex Beach production.

Lucy Cotton and Eugene O'Brien have been frequenting Greenwich Village lately in search of atmosphere and locations for the next Selznick picture "The Broken Melody." The only trouble is that when one looks for excitement, nothing ever happens, and Miss Cotton has decided that the most uneventful place she known is the above mentioned village.

Helen Holmes and Jack Levering and company have gone to Jacksonville for scenes in their exciting serial.

R. William Neill is directing E. K. Lincoln for the American Cinema Corporation at the Mirror Studio at Glendale, L. I.

Walter McGrail is to be leading man for Elaine Hammerstein in her next Selznick picture the working title of which is short, concise and alluring: "Love."

Ruth Clifford simply must have her constitutional horseback ride each morning, and when one arrives in New York from sunny California, it seems rather difficult at first sight. But the athletic little lady remember that where there was a will there was a way and her way is to ride from her Manhattan Hotel to the studio at Glenwood every day, thereby enjoying her ride and reaching her destination at the same time. She only hopes the ferrymen will grow accustomed to the novelty sooner or later, and not appear so surprised every time she crosses.

Comedian Seeks Flying Fame — Studio Says Nay

Joseph Rock, of the widely known Vitagraph comedy team of Montgomery and Rock, is one of the most disappointed men on the west coast, and all because his manager wouldn't permit him to risk his neck to win an exceptionally attractive silver trophy offered in an airplane race.

Rock having recently completed with his partner an extra length comedy of prehistoric life, found time recently to become actively engaged in the promotion of an "Aerial Derby," which will be staged in the near future in Los Angeles, and which has as its feature, a race from that city to San Francisco. This race, incidentally, will contain the most prominent aviation talent on the west coast, such noted flyers as Colonel Wm. Thaw and Major Kenneth A. Marr, both of whom served in the famous Lafayette Escadrille, and pilots from the California aviation fields; namely, March, Rockwell and Mather.

Among those interested in the race was a Bakersfield sportsman, who offered a silver loving cup worth several hundred dollars to the aviator who made the fastest time between Los Angeles and Bakersfield. When Rock saw the cup, he forgot all about his business engagements as a promoter of the race, and became so enamoured of the trophy, he decided to win it himself if possible. Blithely he made engagements to engage an airplane, and even went so far as to hire a mechanician. Word of his intentions, however, reached Vitagraph Studio Manager W. S Smith, who promptly vetoed Rock's ambitious plan

Elsie Janis is hard at work on the scenario for her next picture. It is said that the energetic little lady takes more interest in the production of her films than all the other people responsible for their success put together, and now, she is putting in the time before she begins work again, writing her next story.

Short Shots

Director Harry Pollard has found the only duplicate of Killarney Castle in this country on one of the magnificent Hudson River estates, and is using it to represent a House of Refuge in the production he is making for the Frohman Amusement Corp. featuring Jach Sherill and Ruth Clifford.

Leonce Perret has a new leading lady in his picturization of his own story "A Modern Salome," who cannot be talked about yet, as she is to be a complete surprise. Also Mr. Perret has a very good cast including Wyndham Standing and Percy Standing, Arthur Donaldson and Sidney Mason, and last week they were all busy on a very gorgeous cabaret scene.

In a recent scene in "The Girl from out Yonder" in which Olive Thomas is starring for Selznick, an airplane was used inside the studio, in order to create the necessary wind storm that was supposed to be going on. The noise made by the huge motor was said to be so deafening that it was quite impossible for the director to give any directions whatever, and the workmen who were obliged to take care of the lights, stuffed their ears with cotton, very sensibly. We have heard an airplane motor at close range, and we hate to think what it would be like when confined in four walls and a ceiling.

Nicholas Power Company Exhibits Cameragraphs at Electrical Show

Novel Arrangement Permits Exhibition With Safety

IN an exhibition that was as famous for its more unusual features as for its sumptuousness, the Nicholas Power Company provided one of the main attractions at the New York Electrical Show, held in the Grand Central Palace, September 24th to October 4th.

To the man whose interest lies in the motion picture industry the chief attraction was not in the elegance of the draperies and floor coverings or the natty appearance of the attendants. Instead, he was more apt to be concerned by the manner in which the beautiful Powers 6-B machine was housed in order that its use in an exhibition hall might be allowed by the Fire authorities. In other words, this was the first time the aforesaid authorities has permitted the projection of motion pictures with the projector inclosed in a booth of wire-glass.

Having been allowed this privilege the Nicholas Power Company proceeded to make up and exhibit that would surpass all others at the Palace. Besides the miniature theatre with its glass inclosed booth on the mezzanine floor, the Power Company had another exhibit of projectors in motion but not actually projecting.

The exhibit on the mezzanine floor was of particular interest, inasmuch as it was one of the most expensive at the show, in point of money spent for purely exhibition purposes. In round figures, the display is said to have cost $15,000.

The Power Company was the only manufacturer of motion picture projector equipment exhibiting at the show, and they contributed to the general entertainment features incident to the trade gathering, by showing motion pictures just as they are shown in leading theatres throughout the country. Under the direction of Barnet Philips' well known decorative architect, working in conjunction with the Power Company's experts, the exhibit was worked out to resemble a miniature theatre, complete in every detail excepting as to seating accommodations.

The inclosure was made up of solidly wooden column and heading work with rich hangings of heavy velour. The woodwork was in two tones of French grey, set off with delicate decorations in gold. The hangings were of a henna shade with valences of grey, trimmed with gold braid and tassels. Plush rugs on the floor were grey, over brown, and more colors that blended nicely into the general scheme were provided by the rich walnut in settees and a center table which was upholstered and dressed in blue velvet, trimmed with gold. There were elegant electric lighting fixtures on each of the graceful double columns which surround the inclosure, and from the wide aisle as one approached the exhibit there was easily seen a particularly artistic suggestion of a garden scene just outside a pair of French windows looking out of the inclosure. This little set was built under Mr. Phillips personal direction. A well-known New York artist provided a canvas depicting California forest and garden shrubbery in rich brown tints and shades. Just outside the window one saw a pretty hedge of California privet and back of that, the restful landscape. The set was lighted by an electric "flasher" equipped with colored globes and set it off to the best possible advantage.

At one end of the inclosure was a small projection screen which could be completely masked by the henna velour hangings. The screen was of the "diffusing" type, sold under the copyright name of "Haltone."

At the other end of the inclosure was the principal object of the exhibit, the Power's Cameragraph, with Excelite equipment and operated just as it operates from day to day in leading theatres throughout the world. The particular model of Power's machine shown here was the Cameragraph 6-B. For the special display, it had been beautifully enameled in white. The rewinding set was also finished in white enamel as was the Compensarc. A 900-watt incandescent bulb was used in the lamphouse although the 30 amps, 30 volts on which it operated was more than ample to provide the desired 3 by 4 picture at a throw of 32 feet.

Miniature Theatre in Nicholas Power Company's Exhibit at New York Electrical Show

As was mentioned previously the machine was inclosed in a specially built wire-glass booth which made it possible for the spectators to see "the wheels go 'round." Close attention was paid to the machine by two of the expert Power's operators, Joe and Sol Abrams who were dressed in natty white uniforms. The pictures which were being shown every few minutes were for the most part interesting industrials which in some instances had a bearing upon other exhibits at the show.

A. L. Raven, in charge of the Nicholas Power Company sales in the New York territory was looking after his concern's exhibit at the show and was being complimented throughout the trade for the manner in which it had been arranged. Armed with such effective weapons as the ingenious little device which the Company uses to demonstrate its special intermittent movement and a lamphouse equipment for carbons, which cries aloud the virtues of "grip-o" jaws, Mr. Raven is on the job day and night to shout the praises of the Power's product.

Notes on "Take-ups" by G. Waldo

TAKE-UPS cause some Projectionist a lot of trouble such as slipping and grabbing. This may be overcome by taking out the take-up spindle and disassembling the take-up. After you have it apart take the friction disks and it will be found that they are glazed in places. Which will show that there is some of the surface that is not working. Get some fine valve grinding compound and apply to the surface of the disks. Reassemble and if you have a motor put a belt on to the take-up as you would if it was in the machine. Then start the motor and let it run for a few minutes, holding the spindle in your hand. If it cannot be held put a reel on as you would if it was in the magazine, this will give you a hand hold that will keep the spindle from turning. After you have ground it a few minutes look at it and see if you have a good surface on both of the disks. If not repeat the grinding until you have. You may also use fine emery dust and oil for grinding. If you have not a motor it can be done just as well by hand but will take a little longer. After you have ground the disks to suit you wash all the grinding compound off and reassemble.

Knocking the City Man

HERE'S another from our correspondent Christopher:

Have just finished reading the last issue of the News and although I wrote you only a few days ago I couldn't restrain myself from writing again.

I suppose you are saying to yourself: "What does he want now?"

Well, this is just a little item in which I wish to voice my sentiments along the line of punch marks, bad patches, poor film and in fact everything.

I read the letter in the News of Mr. Lewis Garvin and will say that he has hit the nail on the head and I am going to give it another rap.

I have read at different times and in different magazines, letters that the operators (or maybe I had better say Projectionists) have written and nine out of every ten have always run down the small town fellow.

Now let me tell all of the big fellows in the big theatres in the cities a few things because I am a small town operator myself and if anyone has anything to say to the small town operator, believe me, he wants to be sure he isn't living in a glass house himself.

When it comes to the punch marks in film I will take my stand beside Mr. Garvin and say it is the city operator that does it.

I certainly would like to have the fellow by the neck that takes a new print and a punch and makes believe he is a street car conductor.

If you fellows like to use a punch so well, come up here to Pittsburgh and get a job on the car line. They need conductors and some of you fellows would make good ones.

I know you are tired getting strips of film showing punch marks and bad patches and I know I have sent in my share, but I couldn't help sending this bunch to you. This bunch of holes was in the last reel of a comedy. Question: Can you or anyone else tell me what was the idea of the holes in the last reel?

I can't agree with Mr. Garvin about the Fox Productions for we always get good prints down this way. The worst I get are from the Exhibitors Mutual and believe me they are bad.

Well, if anyone has anything to say about the small town operators just let him tell his story and we will hold up our end. And let me tell you all this much, that when it comes to putting a picture on the screen it always takes a small town operator to do the work.

Excuse me, Mr. Bragdon, for making my letter so long but when I start to write I always say what I have to say. I am going to write again next month if you will let me have the space and next month it will be a little subject on "Pictures I Have Seen in Big Cities and a Few Hints for City Operators." All city operators (or Projectionists) please order your News in advance.

If you have space please publish this. Can you use my name? Sure.

Remember I am everybody's friend.

REPLY:

You're wrong again.

We never say "What does he want now?" but instead, "What's he got to say now." You see, Christopher, we're always on the watch for the fellow with new ideas, new thoughts, new schemes and new results.

But if he "wants something" we try to get it for him. That's why we call this section "Equipment Service."

Some day you men in your "small towns" will stir up a red hot orator from the city and then watch out. We have appointed ourselves "referee" and intend to watch the contest with powerful field glasses. So go to it. The blame must go somewhere. Here are the columns for your use. All that is needed is the "copy" to fill it.

Showing the Excellent Idea Used in Window Displays by the Becker Theatre Supply Company

Buffalo Simplex Distributor Highly Successful

ONE of the most progressive theatre supply houses in New York State is The Becker Theatre Supply Company, located at 184 Franklin street, Buffalo, N. Y. This concern, of which Mr. "Al." Becker is proprietor and manager, represents the Simplex selling agency for Western New York State. The Becker Theatre Supply Company is located in the centre of the film district of Buffalo and is especially conspicuous in the way of attractive window displays and the continuous exhibition of up-to-date theatre equipment and accessories.

Mr. Becker whose activities in the film business around Western New York are well known to all local men in the industry is building up a splendid equipment and supply trade through his insistence of rendering prompt and efficient service to his customers by his entire organization.

The Becker Theatre Supply Company includes as a part of its establishment a well-equipped repair shop, where, under the capable administration of Mr. William Johnson, electrical repairs and alterations are skilfully effected. This department is fitted up with necessary machinery such as upright drills, lathes, presses, etc., for the careful repair work which the working mechanism of the Projector requires.

The ground floor of the House of Becker also contains well appointed and good sized screening room where numerous exhibitors congregate during the screening or running-off of the various film subjects. Mr. Becker's private office likewise occupies a section of this floor where he is at all times glad to meet the exhibitors of his territory and talk over with them the latest developments in the way of Projection Room Equipment.

The number of Simplex Projectors recently installed in Western New York State is highly gratifying to Mr. Becker and bespeak popularity and success of The Becker Organization.

12,600 Hours from One Tube?

R. H. H., No. 479, Anadarko, Okla.:

Do you know of a mercury arc rectifier tube that has been in use for 6 hours daily for 7 years and still going?

ANSWER:

No, we do not. Have you got one or do you know of one that is still going after 12,600 hours of use? The life of a tube would vary just as the life of an incandescent lamp does, and as in the case of the latter, a tube might be turned out which outlived by many hours, all other tubes working under the same conditions.

Mercury arc tubes we believe are expected to last about 300–500 hours. At 6 hours a day and a 6 day week, one tube would stand up for about 10 weeks. As you can readily see there is an almost impossible difference between 10 weeks and 350 weeks. But — it is possible that this might happen because every seat is a good seat.

Your House is bigger with the IMSCO FAMOUS SILVER SCREEN

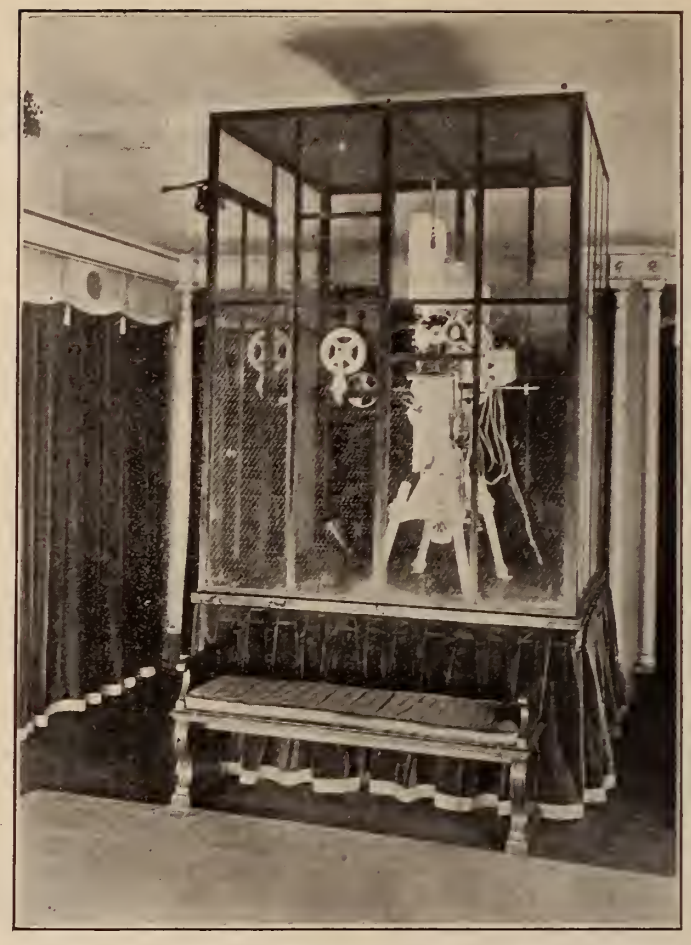
You see, the IMSCO FAMOUS SILVER SCREEN is brilliant at a distance, and softens when you get close to it.

So the people see an excellent picture from the rear seats, and 'way down in front or off to one side they're not annoyed by dazzling brightness or reflections.



This wonderful Screen shows every detail there is in the film, and so completely utilizes the light-rays that you get a better picture with the same current at the arc.

Furthermore, it is the only Silver Screen that can be washed with soap and water without the slightest injury.

If you will let us send you a sample (free) and hold that up against the screen you are using, you will be convinced that the Screen which is best for the Rialto and other famous houses is the best Screen for you.

Powers Cameragraph Enclosed in Fireproof Wire-Glass Projection Room

Blue Spot on Screen

D. E. T., Renssalear, Ind.:

We have a Simplex projector which has been in use for about two weeks. My trouble is with condensers or at least that is what I am laying the trouble to. I seem to have a blue streak or spot in center of the picture. Now I can move the condensers closer together or further apart and it doesn't do any good. By pulling the lamphouse as far back as possible the blue spot gets smaller but does not take it clear out. We are using 6½ and 7½ with the 6½ nearest the arc. This combination should give good results on a throw of 83 feet on a 9 by 12 screen or this is what I have been told by men who claim to know.

We are going to make a change soon by installing a new gold fibre screen. Now this screen will be installed approximately 78 feet from the motion picture lens and will be a 11 by 14-foot screen also a new Gundlach lense for that length of throw. Now what I want to know is what distance my arc should be from the aperture and what condenser combination to get the best results on 110 volts A. C. carrying about 40 amperes at the arc.

This is the first time that I have written to your department although I am a weekly reader of the NEWS especially the projecting department which I find to be a great help to me in different ways.

REPLY:

Try a 6½-inch condenser in place of your present 7½-inch condenser, placing the two lenses as close together as possible without having them in actual contact. With this combination you should be able to get rid of that blue streak without having to move your lamphouse back to its fartherest point.

With your new throw of 78 feet you should be able to use the same condenser combination as above (two 6½-inch) and get good results. The distance from aperture plate to arc will be about 17 inches.

Whatever condenser combination you use do not try to space the elements to change the screen effect. Always have them about one-sixteenth of an inch apart without regard for their focal lengths.

This department is for your use and questions are answered either by mail or in these columns without any charge whatsoever.

Answering Some Questions

R. F. S., No. 893, Minneapolis, Mo.:

How can a picture be projected at an angle upon a perpendicular screen and yet remain in perfect focus throughout? They do it here.

REPLY:

We see no reason why it could not be done providing the lens is a very good one with a depth of field to meet the conditions. This is as regards focus. But even a very good lens would not eliminate distortion of the "keystone effect" which you may have meant. We believe that an optical system has been used in certain places in which the lamp and condensers have been set horizontally and the objective set at an angle. The angle of the objective is such that it causes a distortion in the beam of light that exactly compensates for the distortion on the screen. But we do not believe this method is commercially practicable.

J. P. E. Herbert, New York, N. Y.:

Can you inform me in your publication whether there is any device on the market by which broken movie films can be joined or repaired besides the clumsy way of doing it with the fingers now in vogue?

REPLY:

There are a large number of film menders on the market which while not automatic by any means, eliminate much of the fuss and bother of the old-fashioned method.

These menders consist of the clamps, two of which hold the ends of the films to be joined while the third exerts pressure on the finished joint after cement has been applied.

If you are interested in getting a film mender write to any of the supply houses advertising in the NEWS.

Save a Dollar a Day the Argus Way!

Hundreds of Exhibitors Have Done It—So Can You

You should surely be interested in any proposition that will save you a dollar a day in running expenses—$360 per year. Argus Equipment will insure such a saving and at the same time result in better projection, thereby increasing your patronage. Your principal ambition is to cut your costs and increase attendance—you can accomplish both these things by installing the

Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda Lamp Projection

Manufactured under Argus Patents by the General Electric Co.

Reports from hundreds of exhibitors show that Mazda Lamp Projection by means of the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter cuts running expenses from $30 to $50 or more per month, depending on conditions. This big saving in electric current bills will soon pay for making the change, and after that the saving will be all "velvet." In addition to the actual saving in expense, Argus Equipment will give better screen illumination, eliminate flicker and eye-strain, eliminate the poisonous carbon fumes and dust, make the operator's work more pleasant and give him more time to watch the picture on the screen.
The better illumination will cause people to prefer your theatre and attend more often, which will mean additional profits for you right from the start.

Quickly Attached to Any Carbon-Arc Machine

ARGUS CRYSTAL BEAD SCREEN
(Patented)

This wonderful new screen has been installed and is highly endorsed by many exhibitors—it is the last word in screens. The Argus Screen gives added depth of focus and realism to the pictures, and eliminates "fade away" from angle projection. It may be washed with warm water without streaking. It will insure perfectly projected pictures from any seat in your theatre. Ask for quotation, giving size of your screen.

The Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter can be installed quickly and easily on any projection machine without disturbing the carbon-arc equipment. Any one can make the change by following our simple photographic instructions.

With the Big 900-watt Mazda Projector Lamp perfected recently, Mazda Projection may be used efficiently in 90% of all picture theatres; for longer throws and larger screens than formerly.

Decide Now to Cut Your Costs

Just drop us a line and we will figure the exact saving which should be made by using Argus Equipment in your theatre, and tell you how soon the saving will pay for the installation. Don't delay—write us now.

Roasting the Managers

C. C. Halsey, 1804 Nason St., Alameda, Calif., says:

Start a column devoted to the roasting of so-called managers who book outdated commercial film from cheap brokers. These managers expect an operator to pound it through with ragged perforations in 11 minutes to the reel.

Certain operators like to spout — give the windy bills plenty of space — start an argument with comebacks by other operators. Take a Powers hand book. You do not see one illustration or any definite instructions how to adjust the lost movement in the intermittent; this is the one vital point of interest to all operators.

The writer could send some dope but believes that the by-laws of the union prevent the contributions to magazines other than the I. A. Journal. The writer is at present employed at the Gem, Oakland, Cal.

The NEWS is O. K., but the writer being interested in photography as a side line, has had but little time to read same.

A slam at the Vitagraph for sending out Red Cross duns in reply to request for Alice Joyce's photos and not sending the photos after parties have remitted the 25c might be in order. Two such cases in Alameda.

REPLY:

Always glad to get suggestions for new columns but doubt if a "Roasting Column" would accomplish much good.

If a projectionist is ordered by his manager to put through in 11 minutes a reel which is in such poor condition that 16 minutes is the absolute minimum as far as safety is concerned we would tell that manager that while it is possible to follow out his orders he may end up without a theatre and minus a projectionist. If he is the kind that prefers speed to safety, and refuses to be educated, let him get another man to gamble with. The mere fact that you are wise enough to realize what may happen eventually with ragged stuff at 9 to 11 minute speed is proof that you could land another job with a human manager.

You are quite wrong in your reference to the I. A. official journal. When your letter was received we called up the office of Charlie Shay, the I. A. president, and got an official ruling to the effect that there was no rule in the I. A. by-laws preventing a man from writing for publication in trade papers.

We did not see how you could be correct in your belief. We are sure that I. A. officials realize the value of trade paper information to the progress of your profession and would not pass a law cutting off this means of education.

Perhaps other readers have been backward in writing for this same reason. If so, their minds may be set at rest and they may send in contributions to their heart's content.

Halsey says "He is interested in photography." We were, too, in his kind of photography. He comes from California where the beach "cops" are not so particular as in Jersey and at Coney Island. As a result — well, write him for free particulars.

White A. C. Carbons Out of Place

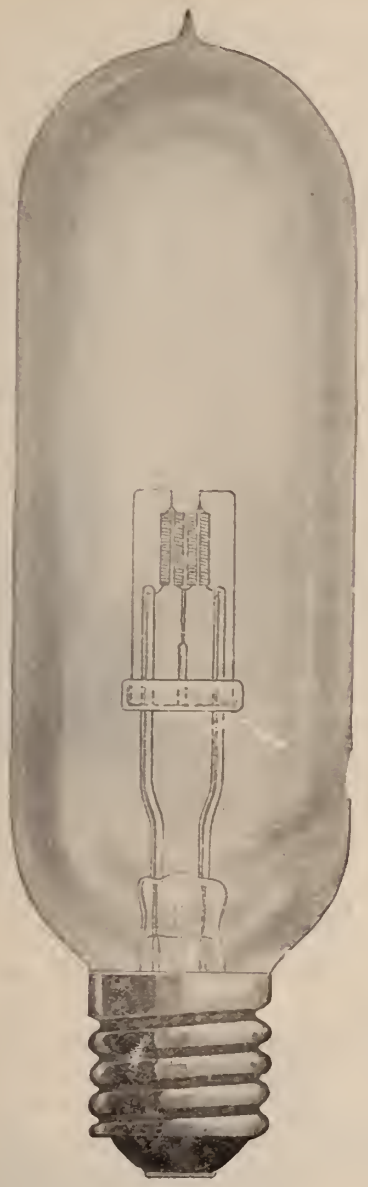
E. W. L. No. 898:

Is it good judgment to use the stubs of White A. C. uppers in lower jaw to save an inch or so? Aren't they cored with different chemicals? They don't seem to work as well.

REPLY:

It is decidedly not good judgment to transfer White A. C. uppers from their proper place to a station below their dignity. It is being done by projectionists who ought to know better. They usually claim just as good results but we doubt if a photometer test would corroborate their claims.

It is just as you say. White A. C. carbons are cored with different chemicals for "uppers" and "lowers" and are stamped according to their "coring." If there wasn't a difference in results surely the manufacturers wouldn't bother with this labeling. Using the "uppers" in the lower jaw to save a short stub is fake economy. Don't do it.



Regarding Carbons

R. B., No. 1154:

What size and make of carbons are best for 60 amperes a.c.?

ANSWER:

Use a three-quarter-inch combination. We cannot give you the name of the best carbon but you can depend on any that are advertised in the Projection Department.

Soft, Pleasing Pictures

are produced when WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMPS are used for motion picture projection. The pictures are just as agreeable to the eyes of those sitting in the front as in the rear of the theatre. In fact, many projectionists say that the quality of light this lamp produces is of the ideal tone.

But this is not the only advantage resulting from the use of WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMPS for motion picture projection. There is no flicker, sputtering or arc travel, which are the cause of so much annoyance with arc lamp projection. The WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP is also simpler and easier to operate, gives off no carbon gas or dust, and is more economical to operate.

Pamphlets fully describing the use and advantages of these lamps will be sent on request.

Motor Trouble

G. Waldo; of Sioux Falls, South Dakota:

Just a few lines to you about your answer to Ralph V. Plew in Sept. 20 issue.

Your answer is O. K. for the type of motor you are thinking of but I think that you have forgotten the induction motor. Therefore, I am sending him these few lines through the dept. The induction motor has a set of starting brushes that run on a starting ring. They run on these until the motor picks up speed then they are thrown out. As soon as the motor stops the brushes again make contact, ready to start again. The ring and brushes are made of brass so it is natural that they should wear in time. Some times the ring will wear out of true and the brushes also wear uneven, if the motor stops so that the brushes do not make contact it will not start without outside help.

To remedy this you will have to put in a new ring or a new set of brushes, or both. But this is an expense and it may take some time to get the parts. The next best thing to do is to take the pulley off of the shaft and then remove the end plate opposite the pulley end, being careful not to break the wires that are soldered to the ring which is screwed to the end plate. Take a piece of twine and tie the end plate up so that there is no weight on the wires. Now remove the armature and you will see the starting brushes. These are attached to a plate and the plate is attached to the armature spider with three screws. Remove these being careful as some of them have washers between the plate and the spider. When you have this off take out the screws in one of the brushes and remove the spring. Next note where the brush hits the stop, now file this spot out about 3/32 of an inch. What I mean by stop is the little arm that stops the brush when you pull it, it springs in to the center and then hits against the stop. After filing all of the brushes about 3/32 of an inch, you are ready to reassemble the motor. First having cleaned the contact on the ring and brushes with fine sand paper. Before putting in the armature remove the oil cups as the oil wick will be in the way and you will not be able to get the shaft into the bearing. Hoping you have already found the trouble.

Yours Truly,
G. Waldo,
Projectionist.

Mazda Projection

F. P., No. 1139:

Is the Mazda lamp being adopted in the city for projection purposes?

Reply:

To some extent in the smaller theatres but not at all in the large houses. In fact, we do not believe that Mazda lamp salesmen are even attempting to introduce their product in theatres where the throw is over 9 feet and where the picture is over 12 feet in width.

It should be said, here, however, that there is a wonderful field for the lamp in the "screen rooms" of large city houses. In many of the larger theatres in New York, for example, it is practice to cut and in some cases practically remake features to suit the program. The Mazda lamp with its cooler light enables the "screen man" to turn slowly in order to catch the action at the exact point.

But for regular projection purposes the small town house with its a. c. supply is a much more favorable prospect for the Mazda lamp, than the city house with great seating capacity.

The Complete Plan Book

"Company"

(Briggs Comedy-Paramount)

A FELLER surely needs a friend in the latest comedy founded upon Briggs' cartoons. "Company" presents the family preparing for the visit of their relatives. Skinnay can't wait for ma's luscious dinner but has to help himself to her cookies hot out of the oven. And when she catches him at it he is reminded that he cannot sit down with the others. Sister is sweeping out the house and dad assumes a grand manner as if he is responsible for the catables through being head of the family. Finally the surrey drives up to the front door and deposits uncle and aunt and a baker's dozen of little cousins.

Genuine atmosphere of a homely character is revealed throughout the picture. It smacks of the soil, of the relatives back in the hinterland and one feels unconsciously the reality of these people who are living their modest lives without pretention. Mr. Briggs deserves unbounded praise for visualizing them. He has succeeded in bringing us close to nature.

Well to get back to the party. The hungry guests are devouring ma's tasty dishes when Skinnay, who has been playing with Tubby in the parlor, notices that the chubby lad has swallowed a goldfish. And so aunty makes preparations to go home so that Tubby may be given an emetic. In the meantime Skinnay and a cousin of his own age steal some of dad's cigars and in smoking one of them, our hero is not only caught by his parent but is taken with a faint sensation in the region of his stomach.

And when the guests have departed pa says to him, "My boy, I'm going to give you a good whaling." "Why what's he done?" asks ma. "Because he's been smoking my cigars," retorts dad. And that is surely a time when a feller needs a friend. A very human picture as all the Briggs comedies are. This one is delightfully quaint and humorous.—LAURENCE REID.

"Why Divorce?"

(Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven—National Goldwyn Two Reel Comedy Released October 19)

FOR light comedy this one will generally please although there are no spontaneous laughs concealed anywhere in the two reels. It does not come up to the previous De Haven offerings by far.

The young couple quarrel and make-up and quarrel again and it is here where they determine to save the scandal of divorce by placing a white tape through the house to divide it into two parts, each section of which will be exclusively sacred to the other.

Eatables seem to be in the wife's section of the house, and as the piano is divided, she can only play on the treble clef while he plays another tune on the bass notes.

The funniest incident is where the pipe under the sink on her side of the house starts leaking and sends a stream about the place.

A unique idea is the almost invisible Cupid hovering about trying to placate them and the little Mephisto with the pitchfork trying to prod the couple along to more troubles.

Finally little Cupid escapes her chains and swings a heavy mallet on Mephisto's dome and love wins in the knockout.

This will get by as a light comedy but will not register enough laughs to prove that it is worth two thousand feet.—TOM HAMLIN.

"Teakwood Logging With Elephants"

(Burton Holmes Travel Picture)

BURTON HOLMES has journeyed to Siam for his latest travel picture, "Teakwood Logging with Elephants." And what is revealed may well be called the leading industry of that little country in far-off Asia. Elephants are the principal factors in starting the teaks on their journey to the seaport. The camera catches them pushing the giant trees with their trunks, guided by natives who are perched upon their heads, and who compel the huge pachyderms to go through their tasks by tickling them behind the left ear. This is a vital spot and when it is touched it goads the elephant into activity.

We next see them hauling the logs up steep hills and down through ravines. One of the huge beasts does the work of thirty horses. They even go into the water and guide the logs and always do they maintain an air of seeming indifference. Occasionally one glimpses their periscopes as they come up for air. And when all the logs are assembled in the river they are guided downstream by natives.

The teakwood industry is a tedious process in Siam. The elephant always takes its time. The impressive part of the scenic is the teamwork of the beasts. Twenty trunks pushing a log toward you and twenty natives perched upon the elephants' heads tickling them behind the left ear is a scene which will not easily be forgotten.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Pretzel Farm"

(Mutt and Jeff Half Reel Cartoon Company Released by Fox October 19)

THE funniest thing about this one is the title, "The Pretzel Farm." Outside of the laugh the title brought the chuckles grew more infrequent as the tale progressed.

It may be that Mutt and Jeff have joined the Actors Equity Union and that their employer is trying to overwork them.

This one is expensively mounted as a hoisting engine and is used to derrick the pretzels from the vine to the coral. It is a "foolishment" supreme but somehow these Mutt and Jeff comedies invariably entertain pleasantly even if a few of them do not score so heavily on hearty laughs.—TOM HAMLIN.

"Saturday"

(Paramount-Briggs One Reel Comedy Released October 5)

HERE is a wholesome offering rich in humor and as natural as life. It is a tale of Saturday's happenings in the life of practically every boy and depicts the "tragedies" that loom up so heavily in boyhood days to be laughed at later on in life.

It is highly entertaining and while it has an especial appeal for the youngsters it will register irresistibly with the adults who have not grown too sour to become reminiscent.

Mr. Briggs, the popular cartoonist and father of "When A Feller Needs A Friend," has struck a keynote not before sounded in motion pictures. The pictures are just one reel in length but "Skinnay" and his young friends are portrayed cleverly by real little human beings instead of via the cartoon route.—TOM HAMLIN.

"IN MIZZOURA"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Augustus Thomas' Play Effectively Picturized

THE combination of Hugh Ford and Robert Warwick looms up as mighty successful in presenting a picturization of Augustus Thomas' play, "In Mizzoura." Mr. Thomas wrote his success in a day when it was fashionable to pen melodramas around a hero, heroine and villain. There was no such thing as character development. Villainy remained black to the bitter end and virtue was triumphant in spotless white.

But old-fashioned as the theme and characterization of "In Mizzoura" are, it somehow takes on a freshness and renewed vigor disguised as a photoplay. This may be due to the skillful direction of Hugh Ford who has caught its spirit and atmosphere and incorporated them for their full value. He has brought out the homespun character of the play and made it as mellow as the original.

And Robert Warwick is an ideal selection for the hero, the simple product of the soil, Sheriff Jim. He brings virility and sincerity to the role, virtues which such a character must possess to make it emphatic. His moments of pathos, when the girl of his heart scorns him, are effectively touching. Familiar as its ingredients are and their development, the play never fails to entertain. The reason may be found in its artistic presentation and interpretation. Mr. Warwick is well supported by Robert Cain, Eileen Percy, Noah Beery and others.— Length, 5 Reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Another famous American play has been adapted to the screen. Augustus Thomas' well known success, "In Mizzoura" will be seen at the ———— theatre beginning ———— starring Major Robert Warwick. The popularity of the star in virile, all-American screen roles since his return from France has been steadily increasing. His work in "In Mizzoura" will add new laurels to his reputation.

The picture is a redblooded melodrama and concerns Sheriff Jim Radburn and his love for Kate, daughter of his friend, Jo Vernon. Jim secretly pays for the girl's education, but when she returns from her years at school, she has grown too fine for her plain lover and becomes fascinated with Robert Travers, a fashionable fellow from St. Louis. Sam Fowler, the fiance of Jim's sister, Emily, is accused of conspiring with the highwayman who robbed the express car of which he is the messenger and is thrown into jail. Jim has him paroled and Sam recognizes Travers as the man who held up the train. The latter kills a man to make good his escape and hides in Kate's house. But he is tracked down by Jim who takes him to his own house and tries to protect him against a mob bent upon lynching him.

In an attempt to escape, Travers is shot dead. So Kate realizes Travers' true character and turns to Jim. Major Warwick is supported by an exceptionally strong cast that includes the personable Eileen Percy, Robert Cain, Noah Beery and others. The picture was produced under the direction of Hugh Ford, who must be given credit for a masterly production.

SUGGESTIONS

You can feature this picture as another successful adaptation of a worthy play. "In Mizzoura" will doubtless be remembered by your older patrons, so try to get them out for this peiture. Mention that it is the work of Augustus Thomas, the greatest of America playwrights. And then feature the star. It is a fine combination — Thomas and Warwick. The latter is just the type to portray the virile role which the former conceived. Emphasize his return to the screen after a lengthy sojourn in France as an officer in the United States Army.

Bring out that the picture is a good old-fashioned melodrama — a melodrama full of red blood. Use catch lines around the title and the theme. There is something of the soil suggested in the title — as if it is a tale of homefolks. And that is just what it is — a tale of homely people living homely lives. Dress up your lobby in a fitting manner. Make it as quaint as possible. Play the old tunes in your orchestra. Use a teaser campaign. This will arouse the attention of the old playgoers who saw the original.

CATCH LINES

He has loved her since childhood and secretly paid for her education. But when she returned home she found that her lover was uncouth. His homely ways opened a gulf between them. Did she learn to appreciate him? See "In Mizzoura."

"A WOMAN OF LIES"
(WORLD)

Presents Elvidge in an Unsympathetic Role

PERHAPS no actress on the screen is given so many unsympathetic roles as June Elvidge, the World star. In "The Woman of Lies" the star has the role of a blackmailer — a role which she has been identified in previous pictures. However, she is not a blackmailer by temperament but by circumstance. Which of course makes her characterization reasonably lifelike.

Any woman who is intrigued into an engagement for the sake of the dowry she will bring to the altar, and then is rejected because of her poverty, will most likely do as Olive Sherman does here. She will arm herself with her feminine weapons, wit and intuition, and sally forth with pent-up fury against the man who brought her disillusionment. And she won't care much whether her anger takes the form of blackmail or not. The picture presents the evils of gossip and scandal but through it all the characterization is real even though the plot soars toward fantastic heights. But a woman practises blackmail no further than her heart dictates. If a good love comes to her the past can be forgotten and then she will realize that her criminal efforts were not worth the expenditure of time and energy.

The story is well worked out even though its scenes are always obvious. It is a thing of character development. Which is sufficient compensation for the murky aspect of the plot. Miss Elvidge's company is capable. Length, 5 Reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Woman of Lies," starring June Elvidge, supported by a large and capable cast, will be the featured attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. This story is distinctly different from the general run of plots in pictures in that the heroine is a girl of good breeding and training who is driven by bitter experiences and unfair treatment to become a blackmailer. She sets out to ruin the life of the man who created the scandal that spoiled her happiness.

Olive Sherman is about to be married to Tracy Norton when her father dies and it is discovered that he has been tampering with the company's funds. Seizing this as an excuse, Norton breaks the engagement. He says that since her father left no estate and he has nothing but his salary, it would be impossible for them to marry. In reality he is afraid he would be mixed up in scandal if he did. Olive goes to work for the concern of which her father was treasurer. Being efficient she soon becomes a valuable member of the office staff.

In the meantime gossips have been busy with Norton and the general verdict is that in breaking his engagement with Olive he has been a cad. To protect himself Norton starts some rumors on his own account mysteriously hinting that there were other reasons for breaking with Olive. He is successful and the girl is ostracized. After a time she gets him in her power, and, cleverly leading him on, absolutely ruins him. Eventually she finds happiness with the man she loves — a man she had befriended when he was in need. Miss Elvidge does one of the best pieces of acting of her career in this picture and succeeds in retaining the sympathy.

PROGRAM READER

"The Woman of Lies," which comes to this theatre shortly with June Elvidge as the star, is a picture telling a decidedly original story of a girl who does not suffer in silence. The man who is engaged to her breaks the engagment, then to protect his good name he scatters malicious lies as to why he broke the engagement. This results in the girl being ostracized. For it is human nature to believe the worst. The girl decides that two can play that game as well as one.

How she succeeds in ruining the life of the man who was the cause of all the trouble while finding happiness for herself is told in an absorbing series of dramatic events. June Elvidge does excellent work with this somewhat difficult characterization. Those who remember her as the star in "Coax Me," and "His Father's Wife" will be charmed with her performance here. She is supported by Earle Metcalfe and others.

SUGGESTIONS

The title and the original character of the theme are the main things to play up as regards this picture, "The Woman of Lies." It should get people talking and if you play on this theme with appropriate catch lines you should get the people coming. The theme will be recognized by your patrons for it is true to life. So bring out its vital points. Also emphasize that this woman decided to play the game too — that she could circulate lies as well as the man who broke the engagement.

It suggests a strong drama, this title, so play it up in all your advertising as a powerful presentation of a woman who fought to keep her good name. Feature the star as one of the best dramatic actresses on the screen. Tell of her past successes. Mention that Earle Metcalfe appears in the opposite role, and that he lately fought for Uncle Sam in the world war. Mention that the play is a powerful drama of conflict and contrast — a drama of sweep and power — a drama of vital action and suspense — a drama of picturesque appeal.

"PLEASE GET MARRIED"
(METRO)

Sets off Viola Dana's Personality

VIOLA DANA'S vital and vibrant personality finds rich expression in the adaptation of that rollicking farce, "Please Get Married." She is so chock full of nerve and vim that we honestly believe that she could make a success of the dramatization of the telephone book. "Please Get Married" is Viola Dana's picture any way you look at it. A rollicking farce it would be without her, yet she, somehow, gives it a spirit and sparkle which emphasize its high lights. Its ingredients are ginger and spice but the star's youthful exuberance makes its risque foundation a perfectly innocent thing.

A pair of youthful newlyweds venture on their honeymoon — a honeymoon which contains one long series of interruptions. Out of their adventure, their difficulty in establishing their marriage, arises a merry concoction of laughs — laughs which are highly seasoned enough for the most deadened 2.75 taste. The brothers, Gloom and Grouch, do not have a chance to show their ugly heads.

The comedy has not a dull moment. Throughout its length it unfolds clever twists and surprises, delicious scenes and situations. Antrim Short catches the spirit of the piece as the other newlywed and the supporting players are excellent. John Ince has realized on its farcical values and has given the picture a worthy production.— Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Please Get Married" is the intriguing title of the Metro production starring dainty Viola Dana, that will appear at the ——— theatre beginning ———. The picture is an adaptation of the riotous farce that was produced on the stage an enjoyed a run of six solid months. The comedy unfolds a most adroit plot which has to do with the honeymoon of an adoring couple who, through a combination of embarassing circumstances, are interrupted as often as they attempt to spoon. In the first place, it turns out that a burglar, and not a parson, performed the ceremony and it is only after the youngsters have left on their bridal tour that the bride's parents learn the astounding fact that they may not be married at all.

They follow in pursuit, but the newlyweds have a start on them, and a great number of unusual adventures befall them in the little mountain inn where they seek shelter and solitude. The night for them consists of one long series of interruptions, until finally the hotel burns down and they are forced to flee in their night clothes. But everything turns out right in the end, for the parson reveals himself as the genuine article. He had been suffering from amnesia which accounts for his presence in a strange house. The little bride had restored his equilibrium by a vicious whack on the head. She had thought him a burglar after all.

The farce is full of laughs and breezes through with sparkle and spice. The role of Muriel is admirably suited to Miss Dana's talents. Her leading man is Antrim Short, while others in the cast are Emmett King, Margaret Campbell, Harry Todd, Thomas Ricketts and Ralph Bell. Finis Fox is responsible for the adaptation while the picture was produced under the direction of John Ince.

SUGGESTIONS

You can capitalize this feature and make extraordinary box-office returns. In the first place it has the captivating comedienne, Viola Dana as the star. She has built up an immense following and you can mention her successes of the past. The patrons will remember them too because they were worth remembering. Bring out that the picture is a hurricane of hilarity, bubbling with the effervescent spirit of youth. Tell that it scored an immense hit upon the stage.

Emphasize that it is a highly seasoned story of young honeymooners who thought they were married but found afterward that they were not. Tell that the fun is derived from their troubles on the honeymoon when they never got a chance to spoon. Use catch lines liberally. This is a good angle to emphasize. And you can work up some excellent ideas along this line. Use circular letters here and bring out the spirit of the piece. Treat it lightly in all your copy. Feature the other players. Make a bid for young married couples in your catchlines and teasers.

CATCH LINES

Here comes the bride! And the bridegroom, too! The prettiest girl and the happiest man in town. See "Please Get Married."

They thought they were genuinely married but no sooner were they on their bridal trip than word came that the marriage wasn't real. What did the newlyweds do? See "Please Get Married."

"RIDER OF THE LAW"
(UNIVERSAL)

Harry Carey Appears as a Texas Ranger

HARRY CAREY'S newest picture, "Rider of the Law," does not maintain the even excellence of his recent releases. The element of action which is characteristic of all his subjects does not sustain itself, though its title indicates sufficient strength to please the redblooded passerby. Yet it is not a mediorce achievement by any means. It can really be defined as an average program offering — an offering which carries sufficient ingredients to carry it by as satisfactory.

The theme is based upon that tried and true formula — love versus duty. Mr. Carey, as a Texas ranger, is torn between two forces, and the conflict of will provides the chief point of interest. Should he arrest his brother and friends and run the risk of losing their love for him, or should he fulfill his obligations to the state and execute his duty? Love is a thing apart, where the law is concerned, so he elects to uphold it. Which introduces Mr. Carey's power of restraint. You sympathize with him because he suffers.

The plot builds to its single strong dramatic scene without any stressful moments of suspense. This scene, however, sends out a thrill, for the wicked brother, to restore his honor, commits a heoric suicide by plunging his horse over a cliff. And so the belated romance creeps in and provides a happy ending.—Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

Scenario by H. Tipton Steck.
Directed by Jack Ford

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Harry Carey, the popular western actor in Universal pictures, will be seen again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay entitled "Rider of the Law." The action is based upon an unusually powerful motive and due to this the whole picture remains as one of the strongest westerns that ever found its way to the screen. The scenario was written by H. Tipton Steck from a story by G. B. Lancaster while the direction was in charge of Jack Ford. Mr. Ford's work has long been a source of admiration to those who follow closely the various western plays of the screen. The amount of rapid action he instills into his work and the manner in which he has emphasized the human note establish him as a very capable director.

"Rider of the Law" tells the story of Jim Kyneton, who as a member of the Texas rangers, is forced to arrest his brother and his dearest friends. But he is a ranger and duty comes before consideration. For a time suspicion points to him as the thief of the mine and he is compelled to remain silent and be outlawed by the community in the fulfilment of his duty. But the thieves escape and it is Jim's work to catch them and discover if possible the party who aided them to freedom. Roseen, a dance hall girl, had opened the door to liberty for them in order to embarass Jim for not reciprocating her affections.

The culprits are caught, except Jim's foster brother, Nick, who commits suicide rather than face his disgrace. His act earns him respect for his memory — the respect with which Jim had honored him in life. And with Roseen and the ringleader eliminated from camp, the ranger turns to thoughts of love. And he finds Betty waiting for him. Gloria Hope, one of the prettiest actresses on the screen, appears opposite the star.

SUGGESTIONS

The situation around which the Program Reader is built seems to be the best for any advertising arguments that you may dress your copy with. The theme is founded upon respect for the law even though to uphold it breaks the heart. Make the most of this idea and picture it in all your exploitations. Use questions. Ask your readers what they would have done in like circumstances. How would they have gone about it were they minions of the law and their own brothers were arrested? Would they have shut their eyes and allowed the guilty ones to escape?

The above is a good angle to emphasize. Certainly it implies unusual strength and promises dramatic action of the most intense sort. Build it up then, and get all out of it you can. Make mention that the Harry Carey pictures are unexcelled by any Westerns on the market. Tell about his past pictures. Play up his horsemanship. Use catch lines. And mention the other players, particularly Claire Anderson and Gloria Hope, the feminine leads. The title is a fascinating one. It has a lot of color. So emphasize it in your copy. It suggests hard riding and quick action. And it lives up to its meaning.

CATCH LINES

The story of a Texas ranger who was forced to arrest his own brother. See Harry Carey in a vivid, western picture. See "Rider of the Law."

He was a rider of the law and they looked upon him as a thief. And he was forced to remain silent. Was he guilty? See what happened in Harry Carey's latest picture, "Rider of the Law."

"A DAMSEL IN DISTRESS"
(PATHÉ)

An Exquisitely Charming Comedy

YOU can depend upon this one thoroughly captivating any audience anywhere, and both principals are supported by capable actresses and actors. It is skillfully directed and expensively mounted.

The story ran in serial form recently in the Saturday Evening Post and is by a well-known writer, P. G. Woodhouse. Although the locale has been changed from London to New York in the screen version it has not harmed the story in the least, as all of the characteristic types have been retained. An exquisitely charming comedy.

Besides Creighton Hale and June Caprice, who are most excellent in their respective roles, W. H. Thompson registers ace high. This picture should be heavily exploited to assure a good opening day and the merits of the production will undoubtedly keep them coming.

There are enough comedy situations mounting one after another to keep any audience chuckling continuously but the outstanding feature is the perfect types portrayed so neatly by the entire cast.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities will register about the same in every class of audience. It should pull strongly and highly please.—Length, 5 reels.—Released October 12.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

A Pelham Grenville Wodehouse Saturday Evening Post serial has been filmed and "A Damsel In Distress" is scheduled to appear for a ——— days engagement at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

The only change from the original story is in transferring the locale from London to New York but all the quaint types and characterizations have been retained by Director Albert Capellani in this Pathe picture.

Creighton Hale and June Caprice are supported by W. H. Thompson and what is declared to be a very notable cast.

The girl is living with her father and aunt. The father is eccentric and has retired wealthy. His hobby is gardening. The aunt has a son, Reggie Byng, and she is ambitious to have him marry the girl, but Reggy is infatuated with his uncle's secretary.

During her school days the girl imagined she was in love with a young fellow who had left the city and when she receives a letter from him urging her to come to New York, a short distance away, she slips away. But her big brother catches sight of her and she darts into the nearest cab which happened to be occupied by a young playwright.

He helps the damsel in distress to escape back home and here is where the comedy mounts in one situation after another until romance has its way.

PROGRAM READER

If you were out looking for a strange man and your big brother discovered you and chased you, would you run for the nearest cab to escape him?

Well this is just what one girl did and the damsel in distress found that she had entered a cab already occupied by a handsome youth.

And this is where romance began. And also fun galore as one comedy incident follows another in rapid succession.

"A Damsel In Distress" appeared in the Saturday Evening Post as a serial by P. G. Wodehouse.

This Pathe picture directed by Albert Capellani appears at this theatre next week. Creighton Hale, June Caprice and William H. Thompson have the principal roles.

It is a refreshing comedy drama charmingly enacted.

SUGGESTIONS

You should exploit this one heavily after you book it so as to secure a good opening and then it will carry itself. This should always be your plan when you have an excellent picture without some exceptionally powerful names to draw them in the first day.

The fact that Pelham Grenville Wodehouse wrote the story and that it recently appeared as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post should be carried in all your announcements. And get all you can from the names of Creighton Hale, June Caprice and William H. Thompson.

CATCH LINES

One girl dashed into a taxicab and met romance when she found it occupied by a winning smile possessed by a handsome youth.

Where one young man was a persistent suitor and stormed the social crust barricades and penetrated family environments.

He thought her father was the gardener and tried to bribe him to take a note to his sweetheart.

"ALMOST A HUSBAND"
(GOLDWYN)

Will Rogers Scores in Quaint Comedy

THE inimitable Will Rogers has in "Almost A Husband," a picture after his own heart, which is to say that it gives him opportunity to create a humorous effect in the simplest manner possible. He has the gift of perfect composure which, with his seeming indifference, give the impression of simplicity and spontaneity, the two highest attributes of an actor's art. Mr. Rogers is always human above everything else and the humanness of his characterization is what makes the picture score so emphatically even though it is remarkably rich in comedy high lights and atmosphere.

As the Vermont school teacher who settles down in a sleepy Arkansas town, marries its richest daughter in a game of "forfeits" and, who gallantly goes his way alone that she may not be burdened with such a homely husband, he makes the character lovable and true. Indeed the star finds fresh humor in every situation, and his quaint humor is expressed in more than subtitle. The story is not dramatic but it carries such a personal message that you feel as if you know the town and its simple honest folk.

Director Clarence Badger has carried out the verisimilitude of the tale and has also appreciated the personality of the star. Mr. Rogers doesn't do anything which is not in harmony with his humor. Peggy Wood make a wholesome figure of the bride.—Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Will Rogers, the inimitable comedian, will appear in his newest picture entitled "Almost a Husband" at the ——— theatre beginning ———. No one has equalled Mr. Rogers in generating humor and humanness and he has come forward as one of the most popular players who ever appeared upon the screen. His perfect ease, his seeming indifference, his certainty in doing just the right thing at the right time to create a humorous effect give the impression of simplicity and spontaneity which is the highest form of the actor's art.

His newest picture was written by Opie Read and directed by Clarence Badger. The action opens on a small Arkansas town, drowsily existing along the banks of the Mississippi, where the "up-boat" is cause for excitment. Nothing ever happened there until Sam Lyman, the new school teacher from "up Vermont way" hit the town. Then it woke up. The action reveals the attempt of a rich mule dealer to win the belle of the town by hook or crook. But his plans are foiled, when at an old-fashioned party, Sam is "married" to the girl in a game of "forfeits." As the divinity student who performed the ceremony had been ordained, the marriage is genuine.

The girl, glad to be rid of the mule dealer's unwelcome attentions, decides to be a sisterly wife to Sam—temporarily. Then the dealer attempts to drive Sam out of town. He is horsewhipped, he is slandered, but he has his grit and sticks. In the end, the girl appreciates the man's nobility and refuses to have the marriage annulled. An excellent cast supports the star. A great picture full of rich humanity and teaching a happy philosophy.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is perhaps the most original that has ever been shown on the screen. This is a broad statement but you can back it up after seeing it. Feature it as something out of the ordinary. Play up the star for all he is worth. Don't neglect a single opportunity to emphasize his name and his talent. Run stories about his career, and his remarkable gift of humor. Use some of his witticisms in your catchlines. You can get them from the Goldwyn press sheet.

Publicize the picture far in advance and use circular letters and every conceivable means to advertise it. Catch lines would be a good angle and you can get up some interesting copy in this direction. Start a teaser drive and employ unique stunts. Run a contest in the paper. Print a photograph of Will Rogers and ask your male patrons if they are homelier than this man. Send out wedding invitations announcing the wedding of the prettiest girl in the town to the homeliest man.

CATCH LINES

See Will Rogers, the inimitable comedian as Sam Lyman, the Vermont school master. He teaches folks to be just human. See "Almost a Husband." You will go away feeling finer and stronger.

Will Rogers, as Sam Lyman, the school master in a sleepy Mississippi river town, creates a character that will live long in the memory. His unaffected acting make this production a living bit of that quaint town of long ago, immortalized by Opie Read in "Old Ebenezer."

When he arrived from Vermont and settled down in the Arkansas town there was nobody to meet him at the Station. He remarked, "I'm as welcome as poison ivy at a picnic." Come and see what follows in the finest comedy of the year, "Almost a Husband."

Because he tried to do good he was horsewhipped, but he won the daughter of the banker. That is what smiling Will Rogers does in his newest picture, "Almost a Husband."

Meritorious Farce Amusingly Entertaining

A very amusing farce comedy exceptionally well mounted and cleverly directed by Donald Crisp. Bryant Washburn is the perfect type for the star role and the entire cast is excellent. Lois Wilson is the leading woman and you cannot blame "Smith" for growing desperate when he is so long denied his bride's first kiss through the series of ridiculously funny incidents. Affairs develop swiftly and the continuity is smooth with good photography sustaining throughout the picture. A meritorious farce, amusingly entertaining. It is built for laughs and registers in every scene. Realistic hotel fire, rain and wind storm, train wreck and earthquake embellish this picture in a manner impossible to depict upon a stage, and yet this Broadhurst play was a popular success for years.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.— Length 5 reels.— Released October 19.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Why Smith Left Home," the great Broadhurst stage success has been screened by Paramount–Artcraft with Bryant Washburn as the star and this farce comedy comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days run beginning ————.

Donald Crisp is the director and it is reported that he has in the climax of the picture the most realistic earthquake imaginable. Lois Wilson is leading woman.

Bryant Washburn's former screen offerings are said to have been eclipsed in "Why Smith Left Home." His former success in the "Skinner" features and in "Poor Boob," "A Very Good Young Man," etc., mark him as a popular light comedy star.

As the youthful bridegroom, Smith, Mr. Washburn has a role typically suited to him it is said Full of high expectations he elopes with a pretty girl and then through a series of funny incidents was not even able to kiss her for a week or two.

Train wrecks, fires, a flirtatious servant girl, and finally an earthquake, combined to make Smith's debut as a benedict a tumultuous one.

Only by masking as a bandit and stealing his bride was he able to start happiness right.

PROGRAM READER

Smith was a happy bachelor and decided that he was so happy that he should become a benedict.

It's a cruel world.

When he eloped he believed in travelling light.

So he only brought three suit cases, two hat boxes, and a dog along, not forgetting the bride-to-be.

But do you know that things began to happen right away?

Why it was a week or two before he could even kiss his wife.

Everything seemed to interfere; hotel fires, train wrecks, and even earthquakes.

But when as a bandit he stole her he won happiness.

That's "Why Smith Left Home," the great Broadhurst stage farce comedy success which has been screenized by Paramount–Artcraft and comes to this theatre next week with Bryant Washburn.

SUGGESTIONS

You will find so many exploitation angles on this after you have booked it that it will be almost impossible to use them all. In the first place the star has a following, so has the brand as it is well advertised, and then the title is well known as is the author, George Broadhurst. Then the fact that it was a great stage success and has played the country over.

As a special exploitation you might admit all the Smiths of your town in at half-price or get full price on a special "Smith" night. Also a bachelor night may be arranged. You can get the full price and should but some managers might want to go so far as to have a pass for a certain night mailed to all Smiths in the city directory. But this does not bring in the real cash directly and is simply a good publicity stunt.

CATCH LINES

———

It's no fun eloping when you can't even kiss your wife.

———

Hotel fires, train wrecks and earthquakes interfere with the flight of true love.

———

He had to steal his own wife in order to win her.

"THE OPEN DOOR"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Novelty Quite Apart From General Run

WE have a very good although not unusual story here, and it is dramatically presented by a very capable cast. Because there is not so much romance and the love element does not so gushingly intrude, there may be many who will not fancy it, especially as the ending is rather pathetic.

But the direction, continuity, acting, mounting and photography are excellent and there is nothing morbid or gruesome in the picture. Action is injected by some fights and the suspense is keen enough to compel the closest attention of the patrons.

It is a novelty in that it is quite apart from the general run of pictures nowadays and eschews the happy finish in the final fadeout.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, average puller and generallly pleasing; Labor, good puller and entirely pleasing.— Length, 5 reels.— Released October 12 —TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Open Door" is the title of a screen drama coming to the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

Robertson–Cole, the producers, announce that this screen version is based on a dramatic story of how one man comes out of prison after agreeing under certain conditions to serve a term so that his two employers might not be implicated, and then finds that the agreement has not been fully kept.

John P. Wade and Sam J. Ryan are featured in most excellent characterizations and powerful roles, it is said.

The two partners quarrel and separate years before the bookkeeper completes his fifteen year prison term and when he is discharged the old man discovers that he had lost the copy of the covenant signed by the three of them by which he would be entitled to a large sum of money.

One partner has reared the bookkeeper's daughter in ignorance of her father's whereabouts. The ex-convict finds that she is just about to be married to a very fine youth and here is where he makes the dramatic decision to promote happiness to the loved ones by sacrificing his personal desires.

This is described as heavy drama with pathos and is said to have a strong and stirring heart appeal.

PROGRAM READER

In every man's life comes a time when he must make a tremendous choice as between catering to his own desires or sacrificing these to promote the happiness of others.

And this was the choice that Joe Moore had to make within a week after he stepped out of prison.

He had spent fifteen years, the best years of his life, to save his two employers from going to prison. He agreed to be the goat under certain conditions.

But the employers had apparently forgotten their bookkeeper and neglected the agreement. Then the ex-convict met his daughter.

A dramatic story is told in the Robertson–Cole picture coming to this theatre next week; "The Open Door."

John P. Wade, Sam J. Ryan and Anna Lehr are in the featured roles.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture you will find that it is very different from the ordinary run of pictures and is heavily dramatic but thoroughly convincing. Tell them frankly at last you have a picture without the happy gushing ending. A picture of real life. For your lobby the box office could be covered to represent a prison cell. This does not look inviting but will attract attention as being very unusual.

Mention the names of John P. Wade, Sam J. Ryan and Anna Lehr who are well known as stage artists.

CATCH LINES

When the "goat" emerges from behind prison bars and finds the covenant of his former employers was merely "a scrap of paper."

Where an ex-convict makes a noble decision and denies himself of the future happiness which he had so faithfully earned.

Society and business life show up poorly in the human equation when happiness and contentment are bartered for temporary power.

"WHEN BEARCAT WENT DRY"
(WORLD)

Should Register Big With Majority

APART from the smashing exploitation possibilities on the title of this picture the production affords most excellent entertainment. "Bearcat" is a husky youthful mountaineer who loves the daughter of a missionary and foreswears booze for her sake.

The old feud story is brought to light again but is convincing, and the quick-tempered fighting hero finally heads a gang of masked night riders in destroying the many mountain moonshine stills. There is beautiful scenery and clear photography.

This is a well directed picture interpreted by a cast of very good types. Suspense and fast action with love and pathos are combined and it will undoubtedly register heavily with the majority and completely satisfy the minority also.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and greatly pleasing; Labor, strong puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 6 reels.— Released, November 2.— TOM HAMLIN.

Story by Charles Neville Buck.
Directed by Ollie Sellers.
Produced by C. R. Macauley Photoplays, Inc.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Charles Neville Buck's story, "When Bearcat Went Dry" appears as a Macauley production in World Pictures at the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning ————.

Illicit stills, feuds, moonshiners, fights, love, sentiment, and the striking mountain scenery shown in "When Bearcat Went Dry" are said to mark this as one of the really big pictures of the year.

"Bearcat" is the nickname given to a fiery young mountaineer whose father is a moonshiner. When this youth falls in love with the beautiful daughter of a missionary he promises to not only quit drinking whiskey but also pledges himself to quit the business.

At a critical moment he falls and apparently the love of his sweetheart is transferred to a visiting surveyor for a railroad who is suspected of being a revenue officer.

When later on the toughest gang in the mountains are going to kill his rival because they suspicion that he is a revenue agent the young hero rescues him in what is described as one of the most terrific fights ever portrayed on the screen.

He wants the man to marry the girl he fancies has been wronged. When the mistake is rectified a gang of masked riders appear and there is turmoil in the fastness of the Cumberland mountains until finally like a ray of sunshine the two lovers are re-united in complete understanding.

PROGRAM READER

"When Bearcat Went Dry" is from the great novel by Charles Neville Buck and will appear in screen form at this theatre next week.

Illicit moonshining and the fights of the feudists in the Cumberland mountains is a promise of much action and this picture is declared to be just full of rich sentiment, activity, romance and suspense.

"When Bearcat Went Dry" is the Charles Macauley production released by World Pictures and is described as so intensely gripping that no patron should miss seeing it here next week.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked you will quickly recognize that your best exploitation angle is the title. And of course the author's name should be used as he is popular and widely known. "Charles Neville Buck's great novel, "When Bearcat Went Dry" is screened at the ———— theatre," is a line that is very ordinary but compelling enough to pack your theatres.

The catch lines should he used to a great extent and any local tie-in that it is possible to secure with the title. If you want to circus this you can arrange a parade of about six women with red sashes to attract attention and a banner ahead of them inscribed, "When Bearcat Went Dry," and a banner at the end of the line reading, "At the ———— theatre."

CATCH LINES

You all remember June 30th in this city. Well you can see "When Bearcat Went Dry" at the ———— theatre.

He produced whiskey that would make a canary bird bark at a cat.

No missionary could convert him. It took a missionary's daughter to change his heart.

He was a quick tempered fighting contrary mountaineer but when bearcat went dry he created a torrid zone.

"PHANTOM HONEYMOON"
(HALLMARK)

Plenty of Mystery and Suspense Here

THIS one is a ghost romance as narrated by a Hindu servant in the castle of a wealthy Englishman's Irish estate. The third member of the eternal triangle induces his successful rival to consent to a "duel" one hour before the wedding, and each bares his arm to a snake which happens to select the hero as his prey.

The bride-to-be enters the castle and when she finds her lover dying she pleads so tearfully to die with him that the Hindu releases the snake again and it bites her. The double exposure carries the pair of souls in a spirit-like limousine for a honeymoon around the world.

Suspense is intensive and because of the very mysterious and unique quality of this offering it may appeal to the majority.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, good puller and generally pleasing; Labor, good puller and fairly pleasing.— Length, 6 reels.— Released October 19.— TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Phantom Honeymoon" is the title of the Hallmark Picture schedule for a ———— days engagement at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

This was adapted and directed by J. Searle Dawley and Marguerite Marsh with Vernon Steele have the principal roles.

Prof. Tidewater with his two beautiful daughters are travelling through Ireland when they notice a castle that appeals to them. But they are told that this castle is haunted. The girls are scared and hurry away to the hotel but the old professor, who has little faith in ghosts, is determined to investigate the castle.

Just as he enters the castle the Hindu caretaker receives a letter notifying him that his master is dead and so feels free to tell the story to the visiting professor. It appears that his master had courted a beautiful girl in vain. She accepted Captain Bob Lamhert instead. He tells young Lamhert that his mother had heen a negress whom his father had married in Africa while on an exploring trip.

The young Captain knew that this was not so but rather than have the rival tell this to his sweetheart he agreed to meet him in a dnel one hour before the wedding. In this unique duel a snake was used instead of the ordinary weapons and when each man hared his arm the snake selected the young Captain for his prey. When the girl enters and finds her lover dying she pleads to go with him to the Hindu servant in the absence of his master, set the snake loose again and it hites the girl also.

Seemingly they pass away contented in each other's arms. From then on the picture shows the pair taking a honeymoon around the world as two wandering souls. It is in this form that some startling and absorbing incidents occur.

PROGRAM READER

If you don't helieve in ghosts please come to this theatre next week and see "The Phantom Honeymoon."

Should it happen that you do believe in ghosts will you kindly attend the showing of "The Phantom Honeymoon" next week.

Whether you do or whether you don't, be sure and attend this theatre and you may change your present opinion about some ghosts.

We cannot go any farther. We can only urge you to be present whether you are a scoffer or a believer. The picture is a marvel of the "so-different" kind.

J. Searle Dawley is the adapter and director of this Hallmark Picture and Marguerite Marsh is the star.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture your best bet is the title used in conjunction with the catch lines, program reader and press notice-story on this page. There are not big names in the cast and it is not a brand that is so well advertised that it possesses any particular drawing power with the public. But the title and theme is the thing to excite their curiousity and these are what should be displayed in every possihle place.

CATCH LINES

She preferred to go with him on a phantom honeymoon rather than remain among the mortals.

As long as her great love was slipping away into the great unknown she begged to join him.

Ghosts seem to have a pretty good time after all is said and done. For instance: the loving couple on their phantom honeymoon.

There are no spirit rappings to disturb the soul kiss of two wandering spirits on their phantom honeymoon.

"GRAY TOWERS MYSTERY"
(VITAGRAPH)

Gladys Leslie in Mystery Melodrama

GLADYS LESLIE, Vitagraph's "glad" girl, who is always radiating happiness in her pictures, comes forward in a role that is quite a departure for her. Her million dollar smile is only seen for brief intervals while her frown comes forward to make her unhappy for exactly four reels of fairly entertaining film. The reason for her worried expression is sufficient to keep the smile away. She is involved in a murder. In fact circumstantial evidence points to her as the guilty one and you sympathize with this mite of a girl carrying such a burden.

There is not the mystery in this picture which its title indicates. In fact you know from the start who committed the deed. Hence the value of suspense is lost. Not enough has been left to the spectator's imagination, and as this mystery note is not the only outstanding point in the structure of the piece you can readily see that it doesn't travel far as dramatic entertainment.

Miss Leslie shows a new side which makes her quite versatile in her way. But after witnessing the star in melodrama we much prefer to see her basking in sunshine pictures where she can capitalize her wonderful smile. It is too valuable an asset to be buried in a dramaturgic dirge. The feature is handsomely staged and carries a wealth of atmosphere. The love interest is naively developed and the romance is not as pretty as its background. There you are; take it or leave it.—Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Gladys Leslie, the charming little Vitagraph player, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, in her latest picture entitled "The Gray Towers Mystery." This is a mystery story as evidenced from the title and it presents many intense and thrilling situations. It concerns a struggling working girl who suddenly becomes wealthy and is soon whirled into a maelstrom of tragic affairs. June Wheeler's heritage is an immense ranch of a recently departed uncle, and she enters a tremendously happy existence, when disaster occurs.

Another claimant appears in the guise of an uncrupulous nephew of the deceased uncle. While this man's claim is being investigated, he is suddenly murdered in a swamp. June's revolver is found, and this fact taken in connection with the evidence that he is the only other claimant to the property, causes her arrest. Billy Durland, a wealthy neighbor and the sheriff, burns down the jail in order to rescue her and save her the stigma of being behind bars. He well knows that he will be forced to guard her at her home. Which is satisfactory to him since he is deeply in love with her.

One day as they are touring the country in search of evidence a bullet strikes Billy through the shoulder. Just then Jean appears. He is the caretaker of her estate and loves her in his own wild fashion. And he discloses enough evidence to make him out the guilty murderer. Thus the mystery is cleared. The posse fails to arrest the Frenchman because he commits suicide. And so June is free from worries and finds happiness with Billy. The picture is fraught with suspense and thrill. And it is beautifully staged.

PROGRAM READER

June Wheeler was a struggling girl who inherited a vast amount of property. Now everything was serene until another claimant appeared in the guise of her cousin. Then one day he was mysteriously murdered and suspicion pointed at June as responsible for the crime. Why not? Wasn't the motive clear that she would come into complete possession if the other claimant was out of the way. And the fact that her gun was found near the body was sufficient evidence, wasn't it? But this little girl grappled with the tremendous problem with remarkable courage.

While searching for evidence one day she discovered that her caretaker had something to do with the murder. We cannot go into details concerning this fascinating mystery story — that would be robbing the suspense. But suffice to state that you will see five reels of tense action and thrill. Come to the ——— theatre and see Gladys Leslie in "The Gray Towers Mystery."

SUGGESTIONS

You should capitalize the name of Gladys Leslie in all your advertising. Formerly identified with glad roles she has here a part which calls for unusual dramatic ability. It is a mystery story and feature it as such in all your copy. Don't give away the plot but build up your arguments so that your readers will be completely mystified. The title is fascinating and you can work in a lot of good arguments around it.

Tell that the star is seen as a little rich girl who is forced to grapple with tremendous problems. Play up the mystery. Use colorful, descriptive language in treating the subject. A teaser campaign would be a good angle to emphasize the picture. Feature its adventure, its romance, its mystery. Bring out the names of the supporting cast. Among these players are several who are favorities with your patrons. But remember in your advertising not to give away the plot.

"SACRED SILENCE"
(FOX)

Dramatic Story of Army Life Entertains

WILLIAM RUSSELL'S Fox debut is an auspicious one to judge from the merits of his initial picture, "Sacred Silence," an adaptation of the successful stage play, "The Deserter." Heretofore chiefly identified with humorous characterization, the star comes forward as something of a dramatic actor. And he gives a very creditable performance of the army officer who becomes a deserter and a coward in order to save a woman's honor — a woman, incidentally, who is not worth any such sacrifice.

Surely a dramatic idea and one that will make the picture as successful as the play. It carries every known ingredient and each one is incorporated for its full value. There is a quality of verisimilitude in the plot and characterization which impresses you. The picture is rich in conflict and contrast action and suspense, pathos and sympathy. And it moves forward, never verging from its true dramatic path. And the climax is intensity itself.

The wronged major learns the truth and confesses his guilt. George McQuarrie plays this part with remarkable feeling and understanding. His is the most emotional role and he makes the most of it. Agnes Ayres is appealing as the detective who tracked down the deserter and fell in love with him. The scenario is compact and well written, and Harry Millarde's direction is praiseworthy in every detail.—Length 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

THE CAST

Major Marston.....George MacQuarrie
Lieut. Ralph Harrison.....James Morrison
The Colonel.....Tom Brooke

By Robert Peyton Carter and Anna Alice Chapin.
Scenario by Roy Sommerville.
Directed by Harry Millarde.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Sacred Silence" which comes to ——— theatre beginning ——— with William Russell as the star, is a story of army post life and the action revolves around the ever-popular theme of a man's sacrifice to preserve a woman's honor at all costs. The story is an adaptation of the successful stage play, "The Deserter," by Robert Peyton Carter and Anna Alice Chapin, the scenario being done in this instance by Roy Sommerville, while it was produced under the direction of Harry Millarde.

Mr. Russell appears as Captain Jim Craig who makes the supreme sacrifice of being branded as a deserter and a coward to save a woman's honor. Thinking he has killed his friend, Lieut. Ralph Harrison, he is persuaded to go away by an unscrupulous woman in order to save her name. The Lieutenant has been killed by the woman's husband, Major Marston, and in order to protect herself from his wrath, she volunteers to make Craig believe that he is the murderer. He had gone to her apartment to persuade her to give up the youth. Hence the quarrel which resulted in the young man being wounded. He is astonished to learn that he has caused the Lieutenant's death. Therefore he suffers for the sins of three others.

Out of this situation comes happiness, for as a derelict in the city he finds the woman of his heart. It was her mission to get deserters back to the army by moral suasion; but when she learns that he is a murderer she begs him to escape. He refuses to do so. Eventually Major Marston learns the truth and kills his unfaithful wife and confesses that he also killed the Lieutenant. Thus the Captain is happy again. The star's virile personality is a great force in the presentation of the role and he is supported by an unusually strong cast.

PROGRAM READER

William Russell, the new and popular Fox star, will come to this theatre in the near future in the most dramatic role of his career. The story, which concerns army life during peace time, was adapted from the highly successful stage play, "The Deserter." A four cornered affair, leading to the slaying of one of the participants, results in the flight of a young captain who mistakenly believes himself guilty of murder. How his innocence is established is revealed in a most dramatic climax — a climax which is tense and exciting. It is a powerful picture, this "Sacred Silence" — it throbs with adventure and pathos and generates love and valor — the valor that makes a man give his all to protect a woman's honor. The action is vital and spectacular to a degree. An unusual cast supports the star.

CATCH LINES

The flash of a gun — and a man's life is ended because of a woman's faithlessness. An innocent man suffers for the sins of three others. This is the engrossing theme of "Sacred Silence" which comes to the ——— next ——— with William Russell.

See William Russell in the greatest picture of his career. See him in a role which carries him through the supreme sacrifice of being branded as a deserter and a coward in order to save a woman's honor.

"HER GAME"
(UNITED PICTURES)

Florence Reed's Latest Is Shown

"HER GAME" is a picture based upon that tried and true formula of the Southern girl who bucks Wall street to save her impoverished family from further distress. Of course she is successful because she applies her game of artful deception and the man who represents the Street is helpless before her attack. The drama develops in an old-fashioned way until she details her game in a letter to her father. And as she writes the action of the play unfolds. There are no flaws in the composition until the climax is reached, then one sees a bit of artificial by-play.

It develops that the man she married and whom she believed brought ruin to her family, has a twin brother who is the Cain of his household. The scenes in which the latter figures are not effective because his actions are forced. Introduced for the sake of conflict and contrast, the character only succeeds in befogging the issue.

"Her Game" does not hit a high mark because of the false attitudes struck off in the finale. It is a case of attempting too much. Still the wicked brother could have appeared natural had the director not jumped at conclusions in dealing with him. Certain subtitles also impart too much information for the suspensive values. Yet the picture is meritorious if for no other reason than it brings out Miss Reed's emotional capabilities to the highest. And Conway Tearle in the dual rôle of the brothers contributes his best performance on the screen insofar as a study in contrast is concerned.—Length 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Florence Reed, the dramatic actress of screen and stage, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photoplay entitled "Her Game." The story concerns a young Southern girl whose family faces financial ruin through a law-suit forced on it by an old time enemy. The daughter of the family, Carol Raymond, sets out for New York bent upon righting the family fortune. She is determined to play her game of artful deception. And in three weeks the enemy has capitulated to the extent of becoming her husband. And so she writes her father her series of adventures.

No sooner is she settled down than she discovers that the enemy is not her husband but his twin brother who has been disinherited. And the latter is more vindictive than ever against the name of Raymond. He would compromise her with her husband. In fact he goes to such lengths as to make her think that he is her husband. And she is unable to penetrate the mystery—the conduct of his actions until she discovers the two brothers together. Eventually he is punished and Carl is happy with her romance and her impoverished family is on the road to fortune.

"Her Game" is charged with big dramatic moments which is only fitting with Miss Reed as the star. She is an emotional actress of the first magnitude and the picture brings out her talent to splendid advantage. The action carries a strong measure of suspense which is felt from inception to conclusion. The star is assisted by a very competent cast that includes such well known players as Conway Tearle and Jed Prouty. Mr. Tearle, in the dual role of the brothers, contributes greatly toward the success of the picture. It is his greatest achievement on the screen. The picture was produced under the direction of Frank Crane.

PROGRAM READER

"Her Game" is the title of the latest Florence Reed picture which comes to this theatre beginning ———. The story deals with the adventures in New York City of a courageous, young Southern girl on whom devolves the difficult task of restoring her aristocratic family's fortune, sadly depleted by unsuccessful litigation and "the law's delay." The heroine's big city experiences are said to be of a thrilling, not to say startling nature, forming a story which is reported to give Miss Reed's ability ample scope.

Director Frank Crane is credited with the production and prominent among the star's support are Conway Tearle, Jed Prouty, Florence Billings, and Mathilda Brundage. "Her Game" is said to be even better than Miss Reed's other features, "The Woman under Oath," and "Her Code of Honor," in the intensity of its appeal and the wealth of human interest. Patrons of the ——— theatre will see a picture of unusual appeal and excellence. See "Her Game."

CATCH LINES

He had Wealth, Position, Power on his side. She had but her Woman's Wit. Whon won? See Florence Reed in the big, dramatic picture, "Her Game."

"A SCREAM IN THE NIGHT"
(SELECT)

This Picture Stumps the Reviewer

HERE is an idea chipped off the familiar Darwinian theory which the director thought was good enough for about six thousand feet of film. And the continuity is as erratic as a news weekly. This picture cannot be called either morbid or gruesome but attempts to throw somewhat of a pall over the spectators.

The curiosity of the average person was evidenced by the fact that this picture certainly packed them in the theatre. They wanted to see it evidently, but the conglomeration of events augmented by the nonsensical theme and subtitles compelled many in the audience to gaze furtively about and possibly wonder just how other adult minds were accepting the picture.

Photography is generally poor and the cast not up to present day standards as a whole. Weird mystery and suspense are aimed at and when it is all over everybody in the audience look at each other rather sheepishly. No part of either the theme or action suggests the title.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, average puller and fairly pleasing; Labor, good puller and fairly pleasing—Length, 6 reels.—Released October 5.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"A Scream In The Night" comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days engagement beginning ———.

This Select picture is heralded as one of the best dramatic offerings of the season and is declared to be a compelling story of a scientist who tries to demonstrate the Darwinian theory as perfectly feasible.

Darwa is the experiment and you can see her climbing the trees and prowling around the jungles under the guidance of a huge East Indian. The scientist has gone temporarily back to civilization to taunt his two former college mates with changing their minds about the Darwin theory after they grew older.

One of the three, Senator Newcastle, had lost his daughter in the Indian jungle country when she was a baby and hears that she can be found there. The youth who finds her is smitten but the scientist who has grown apparently mad in demonstrating his theory claims that Darwa is the product of his experiments.

It is described as a weird but compelling story presented by a notable cast of players.

PROGRAM READER

He saw her hanging head down from a high mass of foliage in the jungles. And she was undoubtedly a white girl and as active as the scampering monkeys in their native haunts.

He was the first white man that she had ever met. A scientist claimed that this girl "Darwa" was his experiment in demonstrating the truth of the Darwinian theory.

But the youth did not believe it.

See "A Scream In The Night" which comes to this theatre next week from the Select studio.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is one that has many exploitation angles which you will soon ascertain after you have booked it. But its strongest bid for favor is not its pleasing qualities but its title and theme. "A Scream In The Night" will surely attract attention as it is compelling and indicative of mystery and action. And the theme is that of a scientist demonstrating the Darwinian theory by kidnapping a young girl and bringing her up in the jungles with the monkeys.

CATCH LINES

One heartless scientist tries to demonstrate the truth of the Darwinian theory with a beautiful young girl as his experiment.

A young man wandering through the jungles is amazed to see a pretty girl capering about from limb to limb the same as the neighboring monkeys.

Romance sometimes makes science look foolish and then sometimes it is vice-versa.

Coming! Coming!! Coming!!! Who? Florence Reed, the screen's greatest actress in her latest and greatest picture, "Her Game." See how a woman's wit conquers. See how a woman can play the game. See "Her Game."

It was the first evening of their honeymoon. Came a rap at the door of the secluded cottage. He went out into the storm in answer to the summons and din't return. The half-crazed creature who came to her room was not her husband—! See "Her Game."

"THE LOTTERY MAN"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Entertaining Farce, Lavishly Mounted, Has Charm

WHEN a farce comedy is mounted just as lavishly as a spectacular photoplay it is generally well worth viewing, even from a "sight" standpoint. But when you take a popular male star and surround him with a most excellent cast you make it doubly good. And when you add to all this, clever direction and clear photography, augmented by a corking story and smooth running continuity you are almost sure to produce an entertaining picture, possessing charm and commanding interest.

And that is just what this production has. It will surely register particularly strong with the Wallace Reid following and will undoubtedly generally satisfy even those patrons who prefer the heavier note. Of course while the comedy predominates, there is a love interest, with the final fade-away showing the lovers under water.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are:—Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, good puller and wholly pleasing; Labor, good puller and entirely pleasing.—Length 5 reels.—Released October 12.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Wallace Reid in "The Lottery Man" is the Paramount-Artcraft photoplay scheduled for ——— days' engagement at the ——— theatre, beginning ———.

The story is by Rida Johnson Young and "The Lottery Man" was her added as a great farce comedy stage success for many years. In support of Mr. Reid are Wanda Hawley and Harrison Ford, and what is described as a notable cast.

Jack Wright, a special writer on the daily newspaper, is the role portrayed by the breezy star. He borrows five hundred dollars from his old college chum, the owner of this same newspaper.

When Foxhall Peyton learns that Jack wants the money to play the stock market he refuses but finally loans the money.

After the money takes wings, Jack happens to be near a wedding party and the old flower woman said that marriage was a lottery. This gives him the idea and he proposes that he be raffled off with a fifty-thousand dollar bonus to the woman holding the lucky number in the lottery. The subscription list is quickly run up to three hundred thousand and the final day of the drawing rapidly approaches with Jack trying to get out of the bargain gracefully.

For he has met a very pretty cousin of Foxhall Peyton's and has lost his bachelor heart. How the eccentric old maid companion of the Foxhall household found the winning number in a cooky jar and how the hero manages to imitate a submarine in his efforts to let true love run smooth provides a laughable and pleasing finale.

When he is trying to get through the crowd of women attending the drawing he is practically mobbed by the militant females desiring him for a husband. His clothes are practically torn off and he is compelled to sit on the truck under the admiring eyes of thousands of women and looking like Adam from the waist up.

PROGRAM READER

He was a confirmed bachelor and the only woman he loved was his mother.

And when he lost all he could borrow on the stock market he had to make good on a promise he made his best friend.

As a newspaper man he was compelled to provide a story that would add many thousand names to the circulation list.

So being young and handsome he finally hit upon the idea of raffling himself off so that each subscriber could have a chance on winning a prize husband.

But.—in the meantime.—this young man actually fell in love. He tried to back out gracefully with his bargain with the newspaper. No chance.

Wallace Reid is the Jack Wright in the case and Wanda Hawley as Helen Heyer is the girl he wanted but who couldn't draw the lucky number.

If this great stage success by Rida Johnson Young does not register the best farce comedy hit of the screen we miss our guess.

This Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Lottery Man," comes to this theatre next week.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have hooked this picture a great many ideas for exploitation will naturally come to you. If you have a big Wallace Reid following in your locality you should concentrate upon him. But don't forget to mention that he is supported by a strong cast, including Harrison Ford and Wanda Hawley. And Rida Johnson Young is the author. And "The Lottery Man" was a very successful stage play

The Paramount-Artcraft brand is well advertised also. You certainly have many angles to exploit. A fac-simile newspaper is suggested by Famous Players-Lasky in boosting this production. It is a good idea and filled with snappy material. The slides, throw aways and door knob hangers, with material from the catch lines, are good bets. The invitation announcement card to a selected list could also be used to good effect.

CATCH LINES

Where a man drew a lemon in the lottery of love and finally won a peach.

A confirmed bachelor raffles himself off as a matrimonial prize.

An old maid finally wins a man for one dollar and is temporarily happy.

"IN WRONG"

(FIRST NATIONAL)

A Good Average Comedy Drama

HERE is a simple little story of the home spun type with a wholesome atmosphere and affording pleasant entertainment of the light comedy order. It shows the country boy in love with the home town girl, the arrival of the young city chap, and later, the entrance of a city girl to assist in hampering the little romance of the country lovers.

Of course the country boy is much misunderstood and always manages to get placed in a bad light before the villagers whereas the city visitor is idolized for his apparent cleverness. The star has a role that appeals and the cast is adequate. Direction, continuity and photography, up to present day standards.

The action is rapid enough and characterizations very good. There are many comedy situations interspersed with pathos and occasional dramatic punches. A good average comedy drama.

THE CAST

Johnny's Ma.....Lydia Knott
Nate Glazier.....Jake Abrams

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

The Jack Pickford Film Company presents Jack Pickford in "In Wrong" at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

It is a comedy drama of small town life written and directed by James Kirkwood, the author and director of "Bill Apperson's Boy" and is a First National attraction.

It is the story of a country boy named Johnny who is desperately in love with a country girl named Milly, whose mother keeps a hoarding house. A city chap comes to town and takes a fancy to Milly, Johnny pretending at the same time to carry on a little flirtation with a city girl who also happens to be in town. Johnny and Milly pretend they do not care for each other but in their hearts they know different.

The city chap, however, saves Milly from drowning and is given a big reception for so doing. Johnny finds himself "In Wrong" but before the end of the picture by some daring work in which he captures two bank robbers we find him "In Right."

Small town life, the joys and sorrows of childhood days, of boyhood and girlhood loves and the days of the old swimmin' hole are the features of this story. It has its laughts and its pathos.

SUGGESTIONS

When you hook this film above all feature the director and author James Kirkwood after the star in your advertising. Mr. Kirkwood is one of our best known directors, having put over many big successes. Do not forget to mention that he also directed and wrote "Bill Apperson's Boy" which is considered one of Jack Pickford's best productions and for a time was director of a great many Mary Pickford features. Also mention that this is a story of small town life and invite your patrons to live over again their childhood days. Tell them that the feature contains its laughs and its pathos.

PROGRAM READER

Johnny missed a big chance when Milly, out in a canoe, dumps over and the city chap leaps off a high bridge, rescues her, and then to cap the climax, a big reception is given for the city chap and even Johnny's own mother is on the committee to honor the hero. This was too much for Johnny. He was "In Wrong" at every turn. He was deeply in love with Milly but when the city chap arrived in town and was "smitten" with her he pretended in turn to be "smitten" with a city girl, although he and Milly knew they loved each other.

Johnny, however, decides to leave home but is prevented by a bank robbery which takes place. After thrilling encounters, he captures two of the robbers with their loot and drives them into town. The tables are now turned, and Johnny finds himself a hero and "In Right."

It is a simple story of small town life, of the joys and sorrows of childhood days of the little red school house, of boyhood and girlhood loves of the days of the old swimmin' hole below the dam and the cherished rag doll.

James Kirkwood who is director and author of this feature also directed and wrote "Bill Apperson's Boy" which was one of Jack Pickford's latest successes.

Gentlemen:

It gave me genuine pleasure to learn today from Louis B. Mayer that the Rothacker plant is to make the prints of all my First National pictures.

This is because I realize that your standard of quality, such as established in Anita Stewart's "Her Kingdom of Dreams" and Constance Talmadge's "A Temperamental Wife", is essential to the proper production of screen art.

Yours truly,
